New Series, No. 181.

BEADLE'S

No. 502.

NEW DIVISIONELS)

Rangers of the Mohawk.

Popular Dime Hand-Books.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Bach volume 100 12mo. pages, sent post-paid on receipt of price-ten cents each.

STANDARD SCHOOL SERIES.

DIME SPEAKERS.

1. Dime American Speaker.

2. Dime National Speaker.

3. Dime Patriotic Speaker.

4. Dime Comic Speaker.

5. Dime Blocutionist.

6. Dime Humorous Speaker.

7. Dime Standard Speaker.

8. Dime Stump Speaker.

9. Dime Juvenile Speaker. 10. Dime Spread-eagle Speaker.

11. Dime Debater and Chairman's Guide.

12. Dime Exhibition Speaker.

18. Dime School Speaker.

14. Dime Ludicrous Speaker.

15. Carl Pretzel's Komikal Speaker.

16. Dime Youth's Speaker.

17. Dime Eloquent Speaker.

Dime Haif Columbia Speaker.
 Dime Serio-Comic Speaker.

20. Dime Select Speaker.

Dime Melodist. (Music and Words.) School Melodist. (Music and Words.) DIME DIALOGUES.

Dime Dialogues Number One.

Dime Dialogues Number Two.

Dime Dialogues Number Three.

Dime Dialogues Number Fonr.

Dime Dialogues Number Five.

Dime Dialogues Number Six.

Dime Dialogues Number Seven.

Dime Dialogues Number Eight.

Dime Dialogues Number Nine.

Dime Dialogues Number Ten.

Dime Dialogues Number Eleven.

Dime Dialogues Number Twelve.

Dime Dialogues Number Thirteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Fourteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Fifteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Sixteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Seventeen.

Dime Dialogues Number Eighteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Nineteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Twenty.

Dime Dialogues Number Twenty-one

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERIES.

1-DIME GENTS' LETTER-WRITER-Embracing Forms, Models, Suggestion and Rules for the use of all classes, on all occasions.

2-DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE-For Ladies and Gentlemen: being a Guide True Gentility and Good-Breeding, and a Directory to the Usages of society.

3-DIME BOOK OF VERSES-Comprising Verses for Valentines, Mottoes, Collets, St. Valentine Verses, Bridal and Marriage Verses, Verses of Love, et

4-DIME BOOK OF DREAMS-Their Roman ce and Mystery; with a completerpreting Dictionary. Compiled from the most accredited sources.

5-DIME FORTUNE-TELLER-Comprising the art of Fortune-Telling, he read Character, etc.

6-DIME LADIES' LETTER-WRITER-Giving the various forms of Lette School Days, Love and Friendship, of Society, etc.

7-DIME LOVERS' CASKET-A Treatise and Guide to Friendship, Love, Complete Floral Dictionary, etc.

8-DIME BALL-ROOM COMPANION-And Guide to Dancing. Giving of Etiquette, hints on Private Parties, toilettes for the Ball-room, etc.

9-BOOK OF 100 GAMES-Out-door and In-door SUMMER GAMES for Tou and Families in the Country, Picules, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeitz

10-DIME CHESS INSTRUCTOR-A complete hand-book of instruction, g

11-DIME BOOK OF CROQUET-A complete guide to the game, with the l

12-DIME BOOK OF BEAUTY-A delightful book, full of interesting infection. It deserves a place in the hands of every one who would be beauti DIME ROBLESON CRUSOE-In large octavo, double columns, illustrated.

FAMILY SERIES.

1. DIME COOK BOOK.

2 DIME RECIPE BOOK.

A DENIE HOUSEWIDE'S MANUAL

4. DIME FAMILY PHYSKIAN.

5. DIME DRESSMAKING AND LINERY.

The above books are sold by Newsdenlers everywhere, or will be sent, pold, to any address, on receipt of price, 10 cents each. BEADLE & AD Politshers, 98 William Street, New York.

RANGERS OF THE MOHAWK.

A TALE OF CHERRY VALLEY.

BY EDWARD S. ELLIS,

AUTHOR OF THE FOLLOWING DIME NOVELS:

332 RIVAL HUNTERS.

345 THE LONG TRAIL.

347 THE PHANTOM TRAIL.

348 THE APACHE GUIDE.

352 ON THE TRAIL.

376 PHANTOM HORSEMAN.

455 THE TRAIL HUNTERS.

460 THE QUAKER SCOUT.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, 98 WILLIAM STREET.

BEADLE AND COMPANY,

BEADLE AND COMPANY,

Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

A JAKE OF CHERRY PALLET.

MENTARON AND MENTARES

interior of multiple

RANGERS OF THE MOHAWK.

CHAPTER I.

THE FORT AND ITS DEFENDER.

On a spring morning, in the year 1777, the forests in Northern Central New York resounded with the tramp of armed men. Fort Schuyler, standing on the site of the present town of Rome, had been occupied by Colonel Gansevoort, with his regiment of patriots. The British General, St. Leger, was on his way to invest it. His division had been collected at Oswego, and, as was the case with all offensive bodies under British leaders coming in from Canada, a large part of it was composed of Tories and Indians. The latter were drawn mostly from the Six Nations, although represent atives of other tribes were not wanting.

At night their camp-fires lit up the wood, as if at a carniwal. From every direction were heard the boisterous shout, the laugh and the song, which awakened the forest echoes for miles. On the outskirts of the army, traveling as their erratic fancy dictated, were the Indians. Dark, sullen, vindictive, they mingled little with the reckless soldiers around them, although fighting for the royal cause with demoniac fury.
Sometimes alone, and sometimes in bands, they wandered miles away to attack the lonely cabin, or to make some raid into an exposed settlement, generally returning at nightfall, and slumbering by the camp-fires of their leaders.

Fort Schuyler stood on the site of old Fort Stanwix. Its fortifications were not completed when St. Leger proceeded to invest it. The brave Colonel Gansevoort, however, threw up the best protection which time permitted, and retired within, resolved to hold the post at all cost. His situation was critical in the extreme, as starvation was a fee not to be conquered.

Fully aware of this the American General, Herkimer, with a regiment of militia, marched to Gansevoort's relief. The General encountered the foe at Oriskany, where he found a large force of Tories and Indians under command of Colonel Butler and Brandt, the Indian chief.

The battle which followed was fiercely contested on both sides. Among the Tories were many excellent sharpshootera. General Herkimer soon received a mortal wound. Left with out their leader, the militia broke and fled down the Mohawk the Indians and Tories in full pursuit. At this battle were perpetrated barbarities which rendered the name of Oriskany a by-word among the avenging patriots. "Remember Oriskany!" was often the answer to the vain prayer of some imploring wretch, as he knelt before his conqueror.

General Herkimer being defeated, the siege of Fort Schuyler was pressed by St. Leger, with every means at his command. He sat down in front of it, raised batteries, and bombarded it with a determination that seemingly would not be thwarted. But the patriots held out against all his attacks. The most trained warriors of the Mohawks could not catch the sentinels at fault. Many a red-skin, who spent half the night in stealing up to the fortification, received a bullet through his head for his reward; many an artful Mohawk, who availed himself of some cunning contrivance, by which he hoped to deceive the Americans, was riddled through and through at the very moment he was counting upon triamph.

There were men behind the walls of Fort Schuyler who understood woodcraft, men who had before encountered the Indians, and who were not to be deceived by any red-skin invention. All knew the deminiac hate of the Tories and savages too well to place themselves voluntarily in their power.

The siege progressed slowly. Growing impatient, St. Leger sent repeated threats to Colonel Ganseveort, assuring him that the place must fall, and that, in case he and his men persisted in holding out, he, St. Leger, could not be responsible for any excesses of the Indians. This gentle insinuation failing to make any impression, St. Leger followed it with several others more forcible, and finally declared that if the Fort was not surrendered by a certain time, he should proceed to carry it at any risk. Once taken, he proposed to consign its defenders to the mercies of the savages, who, by this continued baffling of their plans, were completely infuriated. To each and all of these threats the same answer was returned. If St. Leger wished the fort he was advised to take it.

CHAPTER II.

A CONFERENCE.

A CAYUGA Indian and a white man were seated beneat a branching tree one morning, in close intercourse. It was a morning in May, and the siege had been in progress for some weeks. The white man, who was no other than Walter Butler, was stretched upon the ground, smoking a short, black pipe, while the face of the savage was as stolid and motionless as stone.

"Them infernal rebels hold out amazingly, Thugwan! When we do lay hands on 'em, I reckon there'll be a lot of toasting done. Did you try to steal up to the place last night?"

"Thugwan no go there-shoot two-tree-four Mohawk last night."

Arnold, has been sent by Schuyler to attack us. If that's the case, I'm to the thinkin' that there'll be warm times in this neighborhood. Do you hear anything about it?"

"Dat so-runners come in-see dem comin' t'rough de woods !"

"Wal, let 'em come, is all I have to say. Hello-"

There was a commotion among the branches overhead and, looking up, Captain Butler saw the attenuated legs of some person, winding around and insinuating themselves among the limbs, as they descended toward him. The next moment Honyost Schuyler, a sort of half-witted personage, dropped lightly before him.

"What brings you here?" demanded the Captain.

"Haw! haw! haw! did I scare you chaps?" inquired the gaunt countryman, with one of his broad laughs. "I reckon I have been roostin' into that ere tree for half the night."

"What made you go up there?"

- "I managed to steal into camp, and thought I would wait till daybreak afore going any furder, as I might git shot Haw! haw! haw!"
 - "Where do you come from?"

"Cherry Valley, I reckon."

- "Eh!" exclaimed the Tory, becoming interested at once.
 "And what news do you bring?"
- "Nothin' but that there's a mighty heap of rebels there, and they're gettin' sassier every day toward us."

"We have plenty of friends there, too?"

- "Yes, but they ain't doin' nothin. If you'd only go among 'em, Captain, and stir 'em up like, you might get a big lot of recruits there.
- "Colonel Butler has issued a proclamation to the inhabitants of Cherry Valley, and I shall go down there to-morrow to distribute it, and perhaps make a few addresses to the people."

"Now do, Captain; it's the best thing on yearth."

" How does old Mr. Gordon and his daughter get along?"

"Splendid, Captain, 'though the gal haint looked as well of late," added Honyost, in a grave tone.

" What's up ?"

"I don't say anything, but then I have my suspicions."

" Out with them ?"

"You mustn't be flattered when I tell you it's because she hain't seen you for a considerable time.

Captain Butler laughed, and uttered a profane exclamation, but it was evident that he was extremely pleased. There was no question but that he regarded the girl with more than ordinary emotion, and was extremely jealous of Captain Heath, who, he knew, was an occasional visitor at the family.

" How about that rebel that sometimes goes there?"

"Haw! haw! don't the old man hate him? I must say the gal, howsumever, treats him polite like, while Gordon himself, you know, has such ideas about manners that he wouldn't turn him out doors if he was Gener d Washington himself."

"I'd give anything I've got, if I could only git that man into my hands for half an hour."

" Haw! haw! you can do't, Captain."

The Tory sprung to his feet, and in great excitement, de

"What do you meam? Explain yourself."

"Why, it's just here. You see Captain Heath belongs to Colonel Gansevoort's regiment, in the Fort there. He had to furlough, but didn't know St. Leger was coming down from Oswego. As soon as he larned it, he put out to jine 'em. He's been around here a dozen times, trying to steal up to the fort and get in, but the Mohawks are too wide awake. Then he comes down to Cherry Valley, and makes Edith Gordon a call, then comes back, hoping he may find a chance awaiting him."

"Where is he now?"

"Somewhere in the woods between here and the Valley. You'll stand a chance of getting him. Haw! haw!"

"But he has an infernal Oneida with him, hasn't he? The

"He hain't got but one," replied Honyost. Can't you take

It began to dawn through the head of the Tory Captain that he was receiving instruction from the ungainly, nalf-witted being before him. The probability that had been held out of the capture of his hated rival, roused the demon in him, and he was hardly capable of composed thought for a few moments. While debating with himself, Honyost Schayler was seeking amusement by whistling and rolling around upon the greensward, the Cayuga surveying him all the while with the indifference and calm contempt of his stoical race.

"I'll see Colonel Butler, and find out whether we can't start to-day," said Captain Butler. "You wait here Bouyout, until I return."

the same and the same of the s

the plant, their leading as making the property and

CHAPTER III.

THE PROCLAMATION.

"HAW! haw! haw! that'll fetch 'em, Captain."

" Yes, I'm of the opinion that'll stir 'em up," replied the ndividual addressed, carefully folding up a document and lacing it in his pocket. It was Captain Butler, who, with Honyost Schuyler and a half-dozen Indians of the Six Nations, was encamped upon the northern bank of the Mohawk. Colonel Butler having issued a proclamation, addressed to the inhabitants of Cherry Valley, his brother, the Captain, had been appointed to the delicate and dangerous duty of circulating it. Taking Honyost Schuyler and the savages mentioned, he set out for the Valley, and had progressed thus far upon his journey. Several times he had mounted upon a fallen tree, or some other eminence, and, with the proclamation in hand (which by this time was well committed to memory), declaimed it in tones loud enough to be heard far and near. On such occasions the demonstrative Honyost manifested extreme delight, clapping his hands, rolling over upon the ground, and kicking up his heels in the most childish manner, while the stolid red-skins did not affect to pay the least attention to the words uttered.

Another object—if, in fact, it was not the principal one-kept this party in the Mohawk valley. St. Leger had received information, the previous day, that two officers of Colonel Gansevoort had escaped from the fort during the night, had succeeded in eluding his own sentinels, and were at that moment on their way down the Mohawk, in quest of reinforcements and supplies. In his extreme anxiety to intercept these messengers, he dispatched Captain Butler and the Indians, with orders to remain in the valley of the Mohawk as long as there was the remotest possibility of capturing them.

Accordingly, the Tory's first encampment was along that river, and on this pleasant spring morning he still lingered, as if loth to leave it. While the Indians were indulging their pipes, their leader, as usual, had read the proclamation with as much gusto as if it were the riot act which their proceedings had eaded forth. He had been greeted with the usual outburst of applause from Honyost, and the same silent indifference at the hands of the Indians.

"Yes, I think that'll be a bembed ell in their camp," remarked Butler. "If these bullet-heads here only an verstood keels English, they would appreciate it, for I must say the Conel can issue proclamations as well as he can fight to would be a second to the cone in the cone in the cone is the cone is the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone in the cone in the cone is the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone is the cone is the cone in the cone is the cone is the cone is the cone is the cone in the cone is the "Heat am a fact—yas, sir," added Honyost. "But, if we sich a breeze down in the valley us we're expected to raise, mightn't we find it convenient to make ourselves share? Eh, Captain?"

The Tory growled an indistinct answer, when an exclama-

"What's up now," he demanded, graffly. "Hello!"

Looking up, he saw that something on the opposite side of the river had attracted the red-skin's attention. The party were so situated that an unobstructed view across the stream was afforded them. Both banks sloping upward, they also were given a clear prospect for a me distance on the other side. Not an inconsiderable portion of the hand had been cleared, although the dwellings of the settlers were distinguished only at long intervals, and then, perhaps, in proximity to some bristling and formidable block-house.

Parallel with, and some two or three hundred yards from, the Molawk, run a wag on read, then the hickwey between Contal New York and Albany. During the existing war, this ruch was rarely traveled, excepting by penestrians. Good cause for asterishment, therefore, was given the party when it descried, directly apposite, a covered carriage, drawn as a span of horses, that were trotting along at a bitment of a span of horses, that were trotting along at a bitment of the party.

"That's cool," muttered Butler, after watching the vehicle a set moments. "Some rich old termes, backy energy, and then again, region it wirt," he added, in a signaleast tone.

The line is not exceendables of an expense to cross and attack the unsuspecting travelers, but Buder common led them to wait.

" Wait till I hail 'em," said he, giving, at the same time, the carriage. This was repeated several times with no success, when, enraged at what he considered to be a defiant disregard of his sammons, the Tory caught up his rifle and discharged it at the carriage.

The report evidently reached the ears of those within, for the horses were reined up, and the heads of two persons were seen gazing around, as if to ascert in the cause of the report. Butler nationed several times, and ordered them to come down to the edge of the river and report themselves. The sight of several armed Indians surveying them filled the inmates with alarm, for, drawing their heads within again, they instantly struck their horses into a rapid gallop.

"Three of you cross the river and tom hawk every one of 'em!" commanded Batter. "They're a lot of rebels, and I'll teach 'em manners."

Three of the Mohawks instantly sprang down the riverbank, to where a cause by, and struck into the stream. In the mean time, the carriage was going at a furious rate, as if its occupants were thoroughly alarmed at the dreatfal danger which menaced them.

"I'll swear there's a woman in there," muttered the Tory, exultingly, as he saw the carriage sway from side to side, maits rapid progress over the uneven road. The crack of the whip and shouts of the driver were plainly audible in the still morning air.

"What makes you think so?" queried Honyost, who, with hands buried deep in his pockets, was grinning at the exciting aspect affairs were be tinning to we cr.

I saw a semif thatter just now. If there wan't any bet men in there, they'd unhitch the losses and leave that londbering concern. The poor fools will stick to the real till every one of 'em is done for?'

Near the center of the river was an island, about fifty yards in length and fill on or twenty in with a covered with vegetation. At the moan st of starting the upper portion of this was directly in the way of the Indian. To expedite their progress, they aimed their canoe so as to pass are not the lower ond of the island, when a clear passage was afforded them of crossing the stream.

The light bark shot downward like an arrow, each of the three Indians possessing a pad the, and using it with all the skill and strength at his common to They kept their eyes upon the carriage, which was pitching and swaying beneath the frenzied effort of the horses, and the terror-stricken urging of the inmates.

The came was just disappearing around the lower edge of the island, and was skimming like a swallow over the surface, when a shrill signal from Batler caught the ear of the Indians. The foremost looked back, and saw the Tory running down-stream and making the most frantic gestures to attract their attention. A moment later the boat had shot out so far in the river that it was visible over the lower portion of the island, and the savages then saw Captain Butler's furious gesticulations. Running at the top of his speed, he was shouting and waving his hands.

At a signal from the leading Indian the canoe was checked when it was evident that something coming down the river had caused his excitement. The savage rose to his feet and locked up-stream. Instantly he dropped to his seat again, and, with a vigorous motion of his oar, sent the canoe directly back beneath the shelter of the island. A new and startling discovery had placed the frightened inmates of the carriage for a moment beyond all danger of pursuit.

CHAPTER IV.

THE CHASP.

-

THE object which so affected Batter, and which caused the at him return of the Inthus Lehm i the shelter of the island, was a second cance that had just come to view around a bend in the Mohawk.

Within the bott were two men, one of whom was using his paddle quite vigorously, while the other kept a bright look-out upon both sheres, as if expecting due or. That thee two were the messengers who had left the fort was evident to the Tory, and hence his anxiety that the red-skins should give over their scheme of revenge for the present, and attend to this more important case. The savages comprehended what was required, and, withdrawing behind the island, awaited the approach of their prey.

The anxiety of Briter to check the Indians, led him into such extravogent demonstrations, that the officers in the canone discovered him, and instantly took the alarm. He who was using the public—and who was a Colonel in the array—instantly ceased his efforts, and surveyed the shore with the keen, scrutinizing gaze of a hunter.

On the right bank he discerned the carriage plunging forward at such a terrific rate as to show that it was from some unusual cause; and when he cast his eye to the left he caught a glim; so of the Tory as he dropped to the earth, as if to conceal himself. At the same moment, a pair of ostrich-like legs were seen to be at the air, as Honyost Schuyler scrambled away in quest of some hi ling-place.

The Colonel addressed his brother officer in low touch:

"There is semething wrong there," said be. "I believe St. Lever saspects we are on the way down the Mohawk, and has sent out a party to intercept us."

"I am at all of running into a trap, Colonel. I don't like the looks of that island in the middle of the river, and it strikes me that those horses drawing that carriage are acting in a strange manner."

are run ing away, but the driver has seen something to fil then him. There's samebody on the bank there, for we both saw him drop to the ground. Lieutenant, I would take my outh that that seallowing, Honyost Schuyler, pitched a summerset near by him,"

At any rate, both officers were tolerably certain Creases were in the vicinity, and that great circumspection was recent any in their in rements. The Mohawk, owing to a recent tain, was quite as h, so that the canoe was carried forward with contribute rapidity. Occasionally dipping his public, the Colonel checked its motion, while they earnestly conversed together.

it was finally agreed that they should make for the southern shore, thus avoiding the northern bank, where had been detected the suspicious signs, giving, at the same time, as wide a berth as possible to the island, which was viewed with con aderable apprehension.

With a dip of the paddle, the officer shot his cance under the bank, where, the current being less rapid, its downward course was much abated. He was hardly abreast of the upper portion of the island, when a puff of smoke issued from the spot where they had seen the white man fall, and a bullet, whistled harmlessly over their heads, and was buried in the bank above them.

The shot was fired by Butler, and in return he received one which passed in uncomfortable proximity to him. Hon-yest Schenyler, thinking that it devolved upon him to do something, now rose to his feet, discharged his piece, and shouted:

"Year hain't hart notody, and them Injins ahind the island

He who held the paddle ran the cance still closer to the shore where rat the same time, a low warning to his companion. He can ideallying in the water, retarding the motion of the look, will, at times, it scarcely moved, and acting as the water he were loth and fearful of descending any further down-stream.

During these movements he kept his keen goze riveted upon the lower point of the island. He had already ascertained that there was no hiding-place for a boat on the side nearest him, and that, consequently, his foes must be concealed behind the isla, and must issue from its lower point.

The suspicion of the officer resolved itself into a certainty when he saw some three or four inches of the stern of a canonical to a kward out of sight, as though its immates had suddenly become aware that it was expessed to observation, and were actions to present a discovery. The moment he observed this, the soldier changed his tactics

He made directly toward the island, as if he were about to land. As he did so, a desperate gesticulation from Butler (who did not seek longer to conceal himself) did not escape his eye. At the same moment the dip of a paddle was heard, so that by this time the two were pretty well satisfied of the character of the danger which threatened them.

The dailying of Colonel G insevoort's messengers had been for the twofold purpose of allowing themselves to reload their ritles, and to afford, at the same time, an opportunity, as it were, to "feel" their foes. Both these objects had been as compilished, and they were now ready for the trial before them.

The oarsman toyed with the paddle, as if undecided upon his plan of action. As he neared the island, he had half resolved to attempt a coup d'état, by suddenly landing and crossing to the opposite shore, and there attacking his fires at once. But prudence restrained him. He was uncertain of their number, while they were probably expecting him to hand, and were prepared for any demonstration he might make. The actions of his foes, at the same time, were such as to prove that their anxiety was to take the two messingers prisoners, rather than to kill them. Consequently, their own personal safety was not in such imminent peril as it otherwise would have been.

"Hold your ritle ready!" whispered the Colonel, dipping his paddle deep into the current, and sending the canoe forward with such celerity that in an instant it was far below the island.

The course of the canoe was so impetuous and unexpected to the Mohawks lurking behind the island, that it was aclowed to gain no inconsiderable distance before they attempted pursait. Then, as they saw it hastening rapidly down, they notered an exultant whoop and shot after it.

The American seated in the stern of the canoe raise! his life and pointed it at the foremost Indian, who instacts dropped his head to dodge the expected bullet. The graph homever, was not fired. The messengers believed that the red skins had been sent out by St. Ledger to capture them: and feeling by no means confident of their own ability to escape, they were anxious not to stir up their fary by the one of their number. It was therefore agreed that the rifle should not be resorted to, except at the last moment. In case they fell into the hands of the red-skins, after saying one of their number, they well knew the fate that awaited them

The chase had not progressed a hundred yards, when it became manifest that it was a most uneven one. Skilled as was the American Colonel in the use of the paddle and canoe, he was no match for his opponents. Two of them held paddles, which they used with such effect, that they gained rapidly and surely upon the fagitives. The latter could only resort to stratagem to keep them at bay.

When the proximity of the Mohawks became uncomfort able, one of the Americans raised his ride again and pointed it at them. This caused a dodging and commotion, which, for the time, placed paddling out of the question. The moment was improved by the Colonel so effectually, that he recovered several of the rods which he had just lost.

The ling that the formidable instrument was not discharged, the Indians once more reserted to the paddles. The Lieutenant had lowered his piece, and made as if to examine the priming, so as to make sure that there would be no "flish in the pan." Apparently satisfied of its certainty, he once more raised it, causing as great a consternation as before, and then lowered it again without pulling the trigger.

The Indians by this time understood the ruse which was being practised upon them, and evidenced less fear of being shot, still, as they could not feel assured that the piece would not be discharged, it operated in a degree to retard their own progress sufficiently to afford the fagicies a chance of escape.

All this time, Butler, with his savage companions, and Honyost Schayler, was keeping pace with the pursuers, the functional latter loading and firing their pieces continually, while the ungainly Tory kept up a shouting and yelling that would have done honor to a troop of Mohawks. There shots falling around the figitives, sometimes startingly close, reas dered their situation uncomfortable, not to say critical.

At length, provoked beyon I endurance, the Colonel canglitup his gun, and taking quick aim at the dancing Honyost, fired. The leaping and yelling of the half-witted fellow now became so fariorly grotesque and ridicalous, that both laughted outright.

"I denote the man is crazy," semarked the Calanel, proceeding to reload his piece. 'See him jump and hear him yell?' "Never mind him," replied the Lieutenant, " we have got our hands full to attend to these behind us."

while the officer was releading, the pursuing Indians resorted to their paddles with such effect, that they swiftly approached within a hundred yards. The Lieutenant instantly raised his rifle, this time resolved to fire. The saveges apparently divining his intention, again dropped their ours and the soldier checked himself at the very second his finger was pressing the trigger.

This species of warfare could not continue long, and it was terminated sooner than either party anticipated. Like the renowned Captain John Smith, the fagitives paid more attention to their pursuers than to their own cause, and while the Colonel was occupied in reloading his piece, the cance was drifting aimlessly downward. Unconsciously to themselves, it was carried nearer the shore by the current, until all at once, it ran upon a shallow projecting point of sand.

The instant this mishap occurred, the Lieutenant sprung out to get the canoe affoat again.

"Hold on! Don't do that!" commenced the Colonel.

"Keep those fellows covered with your gun a minute."

It will be noticed that the Indians, in pursuing the mesergers, was compelled to seat themselves in such a manner in the narrow canoe, that in case the Lieuten at really fired, as he frequently threatened to do, he had the whole three in range, and at such disadvantage, that were he disposed, he could soon terminate this phase of the contest. It is questionable, indeed, whether the fugitives gained any thing by their singular leniency. Their only imminent danger was from these very three, whom, as we have just shown, could be easily disposed of; but they believed there we a large number of red-skins along the opposite bank, and they were fearful of exciting their malignant vengence.

Both officers, as they spring upon hind ran up the brak, and darted at the top of their speed down the river shore. The Mohawks, now confident of their speely capture, immediately sheered their own cance into shore, and plunged after in full pursuit.

Along the river for many miles ran a belt of timber and undergrowth, in some places twenty or thirty yards in width, and at others so narrow, that a rabbit could not have found a hiding place in it. It was into this that the messengers of Colorel Gausevoort harried, and upon which they depended for their safety and ultimate escape from the pursuing savages.

CHAPTER V.

A RUSE AND ITS RESULTS.

About this time, Captain Butler began to make himself heard, and his voice, united with that of Honyost Schuyler, made a half deloo which could not full to attract the notice of every living being within an extent of a mile. His desire was to be taken across the river, in order that he and his companious might participate in the pars lit.

His cries, however, although they reached the ear of the saveres was disregarded; discovering which, he ordered Thugwan to swim over and bring back a boot. The malignant relakin, whose whole vindictive nature was aroused, obeyed him instantly. He felt an uncontrolable thirsting to twist the near of some helpless white in his muscular fingers, and it seemed to him that his knife was getting rusty for the want of blood.

The M hawk usually is quite a shallow stream, and though it was a mowh at higher from the recent rain, the Cayuga fould it necessary to swim hardly half the distance. While yet saveral roots from the boots, he arose to his feet and which had been used by his court les, and with pad his in hand, shot swiftly back toward the stars had just left.

The constructions that it is afficient to contain the five ham in the last was an include rent matter, quietly swam best the boot, while the Caynga gailed Batter and Honyost to the op-site side.

When the latter party has led, they saw nothing of their companions. A signal revealed that they were fully a quarter mile down stream, from which Butler judged that the fugitives had resorted to direct flight to effect their escape.

A pursuit of half an hour, after the three savages took to the woods, failed to discover the fugitives, and the idea he are to work its way through their beads that they were acting in an exceedingly foolish manner. All these had been running at a speed that must have carried them beyond the messer gars, and the latter improved every second to its a most in fleeing.

It was, therefore, morally certain that either the firities had not run at all, or that they had gone but a short distance, before allowing their pursuers to pass. Consequently, nothing was left the latter but to retrace their steps and make a search of the timber.

Instened back and met Butler and the cthers. It was then arranged that the latter should enter the wood at the point opposite where the canoe lay and proceed down stream, while the three should begin their search far above. The two parties would then advance toward each other, examining the timber so thoroughly, that there would not be the most remote possibility of passing their prey.

It required but a moment to arrange this plan Two savages kept upon the upper margin of the wood, so that in case the fugitives attempted to leave it they could not escape discovery, while two walked in the edge of the river, their day being to see that the messengers did not reserve to the water:

Butler illy concealed his fary at this fail are to take the massengers. If they escaped to Albany, he well know the results would most probably be the raising of the siege of Fort Schuyler. He was anxious to take them paisoners, in order that St. Leger might prove to the fort that them have of securing relief had failed. A mere announcement to the besieged Americans that the two officers had been captured would not be believed, while, if they saw than paisoners in St. Ledger's hands, there was hope that the discourage activity might induce them to surrender.

Relying upon the apparent certainty of sociality them, Butler was fearful that the golden opportunity had so ped and they would get away after all. Hence his chagrin that they had not been shot when the chance was given, and hence the determined perseverence with which the search was commenced.

The Tory himself did not make any exertions to examine the wood, for the blood hound like skill of the red-skine made it unnecessary. Especially Thugway, the Cayuga, could scarcely fail to detect the least leaf that had been overturned or the smallest branch that had been thrust aside. When a half dozen such beings as these were all occupied in searching for the messengers, there was certainly no need for any effort upon his part.

The Mohawk, whose duty it was to keep along the upper margin of the timber, had progressed somewhat over a lundred yards, when he struck a trail that, experienced as he was, prezzled him. He was about to summon one of his companions to assist him in decyphering the hieroglyphic, when he discovered that it was the track of an affrighted pig which had run across the road. The Indian was by no means satisfied with this solution of the matter. An adept as he was in all kinds of trickery, he more than half suspected some ruse had been played at this point, by which the American officer had succeeded in getting away. The assumption of the character of a pig was by no means an unusual stratagem; but under the present circumstances, he could not understand in what manner it could have availed the winters.

While still speculating on the track, a discovery had been made by one of his comrades that bid fair to be of more ting ortunee in its character and results.

The zwin, the Cayuga, hal joined the savages who comoccol the search at the point above. Proceeding somewhat a covarie of the two, he had maintained a position near the ancie of the timber, his keen eyes taking in every object as no advance! with such certainty, as to make it evident that the search of those following behind would be unreworled, however thorough it might be.

He had gone over three-fourths of the distance without making a single discovery upon which to hang a suspicion, when he reached a large branching oak, whose abrased bark and disturbed base at once caught his attention. The snakish eyes of the Cayura gleamed with exultation, as he saw unmistake abiy that some person had recently ascended it.

It was not necessary for the Indian to make a close examination of the trunk to ascertain this important fact; he learned it while a score of feet away, and studiously maintained the distance, in order that any one conceded and watching in the branches above might not suspect this discovery of his iding place.

Taking a position just beyond the shade of the tree, he commenced a circuit around it, looking upward and examining the thick branches at every point where it was probable a person might conceal himself. There were places which even the eye of the Cayuga could not penetrate, which he reserved for a closer search in case the present failed to reveal any thing.

It was not until he had twice passed completely around the tree, that near the extremity of a large limb he made out a long, dark object, resembling a person stretched at full length upon it. The savage surveyed it fully a minute before he felt assured that there could be no mistake.

By testing several positions, he secured one where he gined a much better view of the man. The Indian pointed his ritle upward, as if about to discharge it, but it elicited no movement or response; and then, in low tones, but still sufficiently but, he summoned the man in broken English to descend and surrender.

The commends were repeated several times, until Thugwen began to suspect that the man was really asleep and did not hear him. Two or three additional tests contirmed him in that belief and, with an exultant expression of countenance, he resorted to a species of tacties that could not full to bring the matter to a speedy issue.

Taking a heavy stone in his hand he harled it upward with unerroug force and skill. It struck the limb directly becath the waist of the man, giving him such a jer that learned tembling down through the branches to the ground.

"Who kicked me out of bed? I was right in the mulle of a dream when I got woke so sudden like. Haw! haw! haw! that you, Thugwan?"

It was Honyost Schuyler who, exhausted and worn out, that climbed into this tree to enjoy a few moments rest while the scarch was being prosecuted. He still rubbed his eyes and gazed about him, as if he had not faily recovered from his bewilderment.

y no means pleased at the dashing of his expectations to the round.

Lot that seed had long legs when I tumbled out of it, for I was a long ame reachin' the floor!"

Hal one of the Indians taken the pains at this juncture to took at the canoe which the messenger hal left upon the took, the would have noticed that it acted in a singular manner.

In the first place, although lying upon the west side of the point, at 1 in such a position that it would have been necessary to live it by main strength to force it over, it still manifest la curious uneasiness. Tumbling and swaying from side to side for a moment, it slowly and deliberately glided up and out special, until fully clear of the point, when it halted and to side itself to the motion of the current.

A. L. under this influence, it drifted rapidly downward, a coming a curious tendency to reach the middle of the control which, when in the center, it give over its erratic proportion, and acted in the same manner that a simple log which have done. As it glided past the word where the pursue of the river, surveyed it with a wondering and for the fiver, surveyed it with a wondering and for the time, some point of arresting it, or of call that it is of his contrades to what he had seen; but it is the filter le which one of their number had already it are it has been and resembed his search.

I a sect ustil a habehour later, when he called to mind the value of the policy is a large completed by the canon, that the value is in a second assemble a certainty, and then it may be a last a section with none but hims if.

Where the ', it is search was going on, the canoe drifted neiceles by an is swiftly down the Mohrwk, until but a mere speck in the distance, and finally it disappeared around a sweeping bend. It was just at that moment that Thugwar returned to where the remaining boat lay, and his eagle eye at once saw what had occurred. Historing out to the point, he made a hurried examination of its marshy suffice, and his suspicious were instantly confirmed.

He turned and gazed down stream, but there was nothing visible of the canoe, or of those whom he was confident had been instrumental in removing it. Balled and indignant, he truscended the bank, joining Batler in one of his salled moods, from which, for a time, it was impossible to smues him.

When the two officers sprang ashore, instead of running down stream, as persons in their circumstances would naturally have done, they both turned, ran two or three hundred yards in different directions, and then dropped flat to the ground, where they were so effectually concealed, that they could distinctly hear the tramp of their pursuers, but could see nothing of them.

It was certainly strange, that not one of the six Indians should suspect that the fagitives had taken this canoe, until it was too late to prove of any avail. But such was the fortunate fact, which proved the salvation of Gansevoort's messengers.

Said in the center of the current, the canoe floated down thream; but shortly it began to approach the shore. It kept up its alagonal motion until within a few feet from the land, when it was suddenly checked. Then the forms of the two messengers arose from the water and looked each other in the face.

"Colonel, I believe we've give them the slip."

"I don't doubt it in the least; I think, too, we have given ourselves a good soaking also."

"It is hardly safe to bail I a fire, so we'll let our clothes lry

Albany. At I that was the last that any of the Indians saw of Colonel Wallet or Licatement Stockwell, for they reached their destination in safety, and the iron hearted General Armall was dispatched to raise the siege of Fort Schuyler.

CHAPTER VI.

THE INVADED CASTLE.

THE carriage already referred to, was occupied by a Mr Cardyer and his darghter Edith, who were proceeding a visit a relative ten miles below in the Mohawk valley. To I former was a wealthy and aged widower, whose only child was the daughter. He was an uncompromising loyalist, and a resident of Cherry Valley. It had been their custom for a number of years, during the fine spring weather, to make this annual visit. The a fitation along the border delayed this Preserve for some time, but as the relative was a brother of Mr Gardner, who had the reputation of being as intense a loy dist as himself, the former hardly anticipated molestation when he set out upon his journey.

There was one fear, however, which at times caused him analy; it was that some maranding body of Indians might in rept him. These bands, when plunder was in question, in le latte, if any distinction between niends and enemiesre bleg and murdering both in liseriminately. He was, therefere, filled with the most acute alarm on the morning in question, when he found himself haded by Butler, and pursued I a mander of Mohawks. His extreme terror prevented his ree finizing the voice of the Tory, and even had be done so, it is a question whether he would not have been as anxious to avoil him, as he had received an intimation from his day or of the state of feeling between him and berself.

He endered the driver to put his horses to their utmost and to pay no heel to any communis to hait or I alon his guit. The driver, whose fright, if possible, was the greater than his mester's, at once lashed the animals into a lei run, us g his wice and whip to keep them at their tremendous speed.

As the lumbering vehicle swayed to and fro, in momentary danger of turning over, the ferr of this catastrophe alarmed the father more than the pursuit of the Indians. He rose to his feet steadying himself against the sides, and again and again his heart rose to his mouth, and again and again! I gave utterance to some half smothered exclimations, as the carriage made a fearful lurch. More than once, as his daughter was hurled against him, did he believe it was "ad over" with both; but as the vehicle righted itself and plunged forward at its headlong rate, he breathed freer and hope received a sposmadic renewal, only to collapse as statenty as before.

Tearing forward at this furious rate, the panic stricted chiver lost all presence of mind, and became more and more reckless each moment. The war-whoops of the Lallius were constantly in his ears, and, as he glanced furtively behind him, he saw them in full pursuit.

All at once, Edith and her father saw the forward part of the carriage tip downward and remain in that position, while a trembling, grating noise told that something was wrong. Looking out, they observed for a moment one of the carriage wheels running beside them in the road.

Mr. Gardner called to his driver. He had hardly spoken when there was a sudden wrench, the fastenings of the horses backe, the man was thrown from his seat to the ground, and the animals sped down the road. Fortunally, the value to had come to a stand still without turning over, and while the injuring the driver, other than giving him a great failed.

"My heavens! what are we to do?" exclaimed the father, as he and his daughter came out from the carriage. "Rebert, can't the horses be caught?"

"Greenes! no. They've been running away for the last half hour, and there's no stoppin' them now."

" But the Indians-where are they?"

All three had been gazing up the road while they were specified, but say nothing of the dreadad beings. As their view was fully three-fourths of a mile, they were some was at concouraged by this.

"It is a barr walk to uncle's," said Elith, "and what shall we do, father?"

"Walk it, walk it. My God! they will soot be after us."
The old man was still greatly excited, for he had felt more fear for the last half hour, than he had experienced for many years before. The three set out at once, Mr. Gardner, as might have been expected, beginning with a guit that extend him in less than ten minutes. This necessitated a limit of their progress was very uncertain.

He is the arm of his daughter, who glanced constantly to it here. St entertained a suspicion of the identity of the items, and had no desire to meet the arch Tory in the place, after the decided dismissal he had received at here hads.

Direct one of these rests, as she was straining her gaze up the wood, her ear caught a faint yell. She saw that it was a took, not to mention it.

"Dear father," said she, " are you rested?"

"No yet. It comes hard for me to walk such a distance. I'm all all we shan't be able to reach brother Jim's, unless wo take a whole day for it."

"You know there are one or two houses this side, where we may stop. There's the top of a chimney now, right over the hill."

They were really within a few hundred yards of a house, at wait a they had frequently paused during their previous visits. As the strength of the old man was rapidly giving on, he expressed a desire to remain here, and the three resumed their journey.

Timy had scarcely done so, when Edith saw Robert, the driver, gaze up the road, and then give a start and turn pale.

"Yonder they come!"

"Who? the Indians?" queried the old man, as he paused at I loked around. "Great Father! let us hurry!" he at all transleadly, as he saw that his servant had not been mistaken.

Great as was the tax upon the old man's strength, Elich, to it is of their great peril, assisted him forward at a more than a factor of the line. When on the brow of the hil, not more than a limited yards distint from the door of their fliend, the retend of the line of a noise away.

With Robert shouring, so as to apprise the inmates of their approach, and half carrying the feeble man, they harried down the tall. Fortunately they were heard, and the door was opened before they reached it. Mr. Gardner gasped: "The Indians are after us!" as it was closed and secured behind

The house was a large brick or e, rather of I and weather beaten, but in accordance with the fashion prevalent at the time of its construction, with heavy shutters, and walls of nearly two feet thickness. Within the building, at the time of their entrance, were a widow lady, a son who was a cripple, the well known Captain Eugene Heath, Buck Buley, a celebrated scout, and Cathoot, an Oneida Indian. These being recent or considerable strength.

Captain Heath, who, in conjunction with Back Bailey, hall made several ineffectual attempts to enter Port Schuyler, was now returning from a visit to Cherry Valley to repeat the effort. The willow lady, at whose house he stopped, had a second son in his command, and from the kindness which had been shown her durling boy, she regarded the Captain with a maternal affection. When any where in the neighborhood, he made her home his home; and, during the several weeks that had dispsel in passing backward and forward between the fort and the valley, both he and Buck Bailey had spent several nights with her. They had reached the piace the preceding evening, and were shortly after followed by Carfoot, who had been on the trail for half the day. The hour as yet being comparatively early, and there being no occasion for undue haste, explained why they were star there, although at the very time the fagitives rushed into the door, they were preparing to leave.

Mr. Gardner fell fainting to the floor. A few words from Edith explained all to Captain Heath, and he give or less instantly to secure all the doors and shutters. Several flow to obey him, while he, in company with the cripple, rulle thair way to the second story to gain a sight of their toes as they approached.

The savages had already reached the house, and at the moment he looked out, Honyost Schuyler, shouting at the top of his voice came strad lling over the hill. Hight behind him was Butler, with ritle in hand, his face all ablaze with passion. As the Tory looked up to the building, he brought his ritle quick as lightning to his shoulder and fired. Captain

Heath was wondering what this meant, when he heard a grount chis site. Looking around, to his horror, he saw the sin of the willow in the agonies of death upon the floor! He had been gizing out of a small window, and was shot in the face by Captain Bather himself. Immediately after, the Tory give orders for the house to be broken into and the in notes frought out. Three savages leaped forward to obey he command, but they were suddenly checked by the forcement dropping dead in his tracks, killed by a bullet from the rifle of Catfoot.

There were three guns only in the house, those belonging to Copt in Heath, Buck Builey, and the Oneida. The presence of the others, therefore, was only an incumbrance, and the probabilities were that they would be a fatal one. Had these three teen alone in the building, they would have bid the Indians welcome to the conflict; but, incumbered by the presence of the old man and two women, whose lives they were anxious to preserve, they had good occasion to be apprehensive of the result.

The billing being of bricks, could not be readily fired, but a burning arrow upon the roof, a pile of brush or a battering run at the windows and doors, would soon make an end of safety, and afford the imputient savages a speedy entrance into their midst.

Mr Gurdner, Captain Heath determined to appeal to that in the first place. He was certain, from what had occurred, that the Tory had no suspicion of the identity of the facitives; but, from what he had learned from Edith, he doubted, newhat, the results of such a knowledge. He was via lie tive, and might seize the present occasion for reverge.

In case the Tory made terms with those inside, Captain Teath understood further, the only reliance of himself and the provious, under heaven, was upon their strong arms and or we leads. The sec of the willow had already been shan, and they were preparing tor another assault upon the door. Captain Heath harried to the lower room, where the terrified belags were had the lacether.

"Mr. Gardner," said he, "do you know who is the leader of those Indians upon the outside?"

- " No"
- " He is Captain Butler, an old friend of you "
- " He doesn't know who we are?"
- " Certainly not. He can have no syspicion of st."
- "Then we are saved; for he would not harm a hair of the sead of myself or daughter."
 - "I have been thinking that perhaps such is the case."
- "Thin'ting that perhaps it is; why, most certainly it is," a lited the old man, regaining his usual manner. "Bat," he a lited, thoughtfally, "I don't know about you and your friends."
 - " I do," replied the Captain, with a smile.
 - "How? What is it?"
- "We meet Captain Butler and his followers, at all times and places, as deadly enemies. My anxiety is upon your account—for Elith and Mrs. Gaskill here. If we can secure your safety, we will attend to ourselves."
- "Did I not tell you that you need trouble yourself no further? What danger threatens us? We are safe—we and our kind host."

Captain Heath had not the heart to teil the poor women that her crippled son lay stretched in death just all ve their heads. He would wait until a more convenient season before revealing a fact that could but set her wild with grief.

While the company were collected together, the door received a tremendous thrust, that well-nigh carried it of its hinges. "Come with me," said Captain Heath, harris of, to Mr. Gardner, and the two hastened above. "Be careful not to let him hear of our presence," added the officer. "Make yourselves known, and ask that he let you be undistribed."

The window of the upper story being fartished with no shutters. Mr. Gardner simply raised it, and note himself seen. The title of Batler was at his shoulder when he discovered his identity. He instantly lowered it, and waited for p'an to speak.

- "Captain Butler!" he called.
- "Well, I'm here," replied the Tory.
- "What does this mean?"
- " What does what mean?"

"This pursuit of myself and daughter by you and these Indians ?"

"Wiv didn't you stop when I commanded you to?"

"With right had you to stop us upon the highway? Be-rides. I did not know it was you who halled us."

- "We.', I dila't know it was you, either; but, you see tir e mel skins wanted a little fun, and I wasn't disposed to inder them."
- ' Hew! haw! haw! that am so!" added Honyost Schuyer They wanted some fan, and am gittin' it, I'm thinkin'"

"I must a k you, now that I have made myself known," persued Mr. Gardner, "that you go away and let us alone."

- " I don't know about that, squire, replied the Tory, with the most effensive impudence. "You see, these fellows have Leer running till they're pretty tired, and they've a notion to rest a while in this house,"
 - " And are you going to allow it?"
- "We'l, I den't see as there's any objection. They won't herm this gs. One of you has just shot a poor Indian. I. don't s'pose it's you?"

"No; I have no gun with me."

- . Well, let us see the chap who fired that, and we will make the matter right. You needn't be alarmed about your-Serii."
 - "You are determined, then, to enter the house?"
- " I gress, squire," replied the Tory, with a significant leer, "if you will go down stries, you will find some of the rod-whites here is a stylence in by the broke any!"

In the lawer room were the Oneils, Elith, the coachman, a I to willow, Mrs. G.skill, who were anxiously listening to the wor is of the Tory outside. Cathor had his position our the leer which communicated with the cellar of the there and was delating with himself whether or not to deand impress of a pine where he could better perform his dals. Wicatha eris e an.

A L. dar .. Openions to the startling and uncement of But. ler, Edich, in a whisper, inquired the meaning of a slight noise audible from the next room. Without parsing to think of the possible consequences, and with a natural wemanish curiosity, she instantly walked to the door communicating with the apartment, and opened it. As she did so, she saw three painted Indians, walking on tiptoe toward her. They had effected an entrance through the window, and were stealing in upon them at the moment of detection.

Edith uttered a piercing scream, and staggered back in the cheer honor. The three savages strode quickly into the room. A fourth Indian appeared, and next the iong, awkward form of Honyost Schuyler came shuffling into the apertment.

"Haw! haw! haw! How'r you? Ho! ho! ho! How's al! the folks? You oughtn't to make a feller come in by the shutters when you've got so many doors in this concern—heigho! Mr. Gardner, how'r you?"

The latter at this moment appeared descending the stairs, his face fairly blazing with passion. As he entered, so also did Captain Butler.

"What is the meaning of this continued insult?" demanded the former in a voice loud and hourse from anger.

"When you undertake to keep a man out of the door, he must come in at the window. How about that, flonyost?"

"Haw! haw! haw! that am so. Leastways, that's what we found."

As Mr. Gardner looked upon this man, whom he had employed for years as a servant, who had always been service and cringing before him—as he observed his insulting familiarity, it seemed as though his wrath would consume time. Several times he was on the point of seizing a chair and oringing him to the floor. And Butler, who, for so many years had been a welcome visitor to his house—to see him adding insult to insult, was almost unendurable.

"Captain Butler," said he, "what cause have you for acting thus to my daughter and myself. What treatment have you received at my hands—"

"Shat up," interrupted the Tory, beginning to show choler hunself; "we have had enough of this palayer. Your daughter seen fit to turn me away when I was last there, and now it's my turn to take charge of matters. I'm on my way to Cherry Valley, and can't stop here long; but I'm coming back this way, and you'll stay here till you see me again. I'm going to leave some of these fellows as guards, and I needn't tell you they won't stand trilling. It'll be dangerous to undertake any tricks with them."

"Do what you please; I have nothing to say."
It would lit make any difference of you had."

"I have a right to inquire what is to be done with us."

"You stay here, as I just told you, till we come back. If st. Let r is it able to finish up the siege of Fort Schuyler is soon, there's no telling what will become of you; but it he does, p'raps you'll both go back to the Valley, and plays you won't. I'll give you some advice for your own good: you'd better take your gal and go into one of the upper rooms, for these Injins might take a hold of you, and I always make it a point to let 'em do what they please. That was the idea at Oriskany."

"But what of this old laly, our coachman, and the widow's son, who is a cripple."

"I grass he's done for any way, for I popped somebody in the face when he poked his head from the window up stairs not the room you was in."

The face of the listening mother blanched, and her heart sickened, for she understood the meaning of the Tory's words. She thirly flew up stairs in her torturing agony. A moment at or a fill upon the floor was heard, as she dropped beside her horses son, and give utterance to her piercing grief. Her to mizning wails would have moved the heart of a stone. She to each to and fro, kissing again and again the cold lips of her poor crippled child, calling him by name, and wiping away the clotted blood from his cold, pule face.

As her low, trempleds wails reached the ears below, a stillness came upon all for a moment—but it was only for a monest. Belief barst into a course, brutal laugh.

"The old woman takes it kind of hard; but hang it, I'ra put it is the lof her noise. Thugwan, you go up an itell her to seep her mouth shut, and if she don't mind you, why you shut it for her."

The scowling Cayuga hastened to obey, for his heart dolighted at the thought of shelding blood. He went to the toom quietly, and, suddenly appearing before the mother, comman led her to stop; but, in her great agony, she acituer saw nor heard Lim, and His common is were unheeded. The reliskin was only too prompt in obeying his leader. Perhaps it was merriful it the spirit of the mother was a lowed so soon to unite with that of her son!

It was not until now that Mr. Garbar and Elith realized what a being held them in his power. Both were too proud o see for mercy, and yet both felt that they stood upon the brink of a fate as terrible as that of the willow and child was had perished but a few moments before.

'Howsumever," continued Butler, as though there had been an interruption to the conversation, "Before Hongest and myself go on to the valley, we'll give this old house a search. P'raps there's something in it we don't expect to find. A little liquor or food wouldn't come amiss just now. Mr. Gardner, you and Edith may step auto this front room, and stay there till you are ordered to heave."

As the two turned to obey, Edich spoke in a matter-of-fact tone, "come, Robert!" The trembling servant hurriedly followed, but he was intercepted by Batler.

"You'll stay where you are."

The took of in ligantion that flished from Edith's eyes, as the returned the games of the Tory, was enough to disconcert an ordinary personage. As it was, the Erston carefully avoided her look, keeping his gize fixed upon the inoffensive coachman.

Father and daughter arm in arm, walked showly but scornfully by the Tory, into the apartment indicated. Butler watched them until the door was closed; then he motioned to the servard to follow from the house.

"See here," said he, in a whisper, the moment they were upon the outside. "These Indians that I have with me are pretty high old fellows."

The near looke I stupidly at him, as if he failed to compre-!

"They've had considerable practice in the scalping business."

"O, kind master, save me!" implored the driver, sinking upon his knees. "I will serve you all my life. Save me! oh, have mercy on me!"

Butler did not speak, but looked down with an expression of amused contempt at the wretch before him.

"Save me! save me! do not let them Indians kill me! I will do any thing in the world that I can to serve you! Do, do! Have mercy kind, good master."

" See here; if you want to save yourself, I will give you a chance!"

"The man instant'y sprang to his feet, his face radiant with hope.

"The Indians haven't noticed that you were here, and I wen't be hard for you to give 'cm the slip. You're pretty good on ran nurs, I guess. So, you just streak it for the woods you'r, and as soon as you reach there hide yourself. Run as fast as you can."

'Shall I start now?"

" If you want to."

"O, thank you! good, kind man."

The driver struck off at once into a rapid run for the woods in quasion. They were a considerable distance away, and he excited himself as only a poor fagitive can, who knews his a depart is upon his heels. But the whole affair was one of the Tory's her lish ruses. His only object was to afford himself a little ampsement; for, had he not been certain the name of a little ampsement; for, had he not been certain the name of home possibly live to reach the concealment, he will have allowed him to depart. So it proved. He had not another satured in parsoit. They could not have come up much are explicit had the lumbering furtive made no effort to expect at all. Five minutes later, the ghastly trophy from the hall of the driver of Mr. Gardner hung at the want of Thugwan the Cayuga!

"Now you may search the house!" said Butler.

CHAPTER VII.

IN A TIGHT PLACE.

No doubt the reader, all this time, has been wondering how three armed men like Captain Heath, Back Bailey, and Catfoot, the Oncida, allowed such proceeding as have just been recorded, quietly to go on, when about a half dozen only were the perpetrators.

The unexpected manner by which the saviges entered the dwelling disconcerted all the plans that Captain Heata and Buck Bailey had arranged for its defense. As the door communicating with the room in which the Indian stood was opened by the widow, Cathoot eaught a gaintpse of their elothes and head doess. It will be recollected that he was stood of at the door which communicated with the collar. Understanding his per and peril, he whisked into the cellar as quantasthought, where his further actions were to depend upon those of his enemies. A few moments convinced him that his presence was unserspected, and then, like a caged criminal, he began to look about him, to ascertain his prospects.

Bick Railey was standing beside Captain Heath when they both mart the savages below them.

"They've outwitted us; ha, ha, ha?" langhed the former, in an andertone. "What's the word, Captain? Small we sail in?"

" Where's Catfoot?"

"He has hid away somewhere, for if he hada't, there'd be more noise below than there is."

t the same time, we could do some execution; but they have caught us at a disadvantage."

"Never mind; we can keep the whole tribe from coming up these stairs. I wouldn't mind guranteeling to do that much without your help."

"We can do it, easily enough, but what will it amount to, Buck? What would they like better than barning the house to get us? There's no disguising the matter. You know what that Cayuga, Thugwau, and the Mohawks with him weall give to get hold of Cathoot and you, and you know, to, that Burler would run his neck into the halter for the sake of taking me. We will fight to the death before we are taken, but we must manage to get out of this house to do the fighting—"

Captain Heath checked his whispers and listened. Some one was ascending the stairs which communicated with a result that, in turn, was united by a door with the apartment in which they were standing. Without a word, the two snows stealthily away, and took such a position that no one could enter without passing directly between them. Had the tured head of a savage, or the form of Honyost Schuyler of the local itself, a speedy and noiseless death would have been the inevitable result.

The next moment the touching lamentation of the widowed mother reached their ears, and the face of Buck Bailey, generally genial and pleasant, assumed an expression so dark and the blidling, that it was painful to look upon. It seemed as it compact by a cloud of the most ferocious passion. But it take it only a moment, although it by no means assumed its former appearance.

So rtly after, it will be recollected that Thugwan, the Cae of at the bilding of Butler, followed and desputched her. Statute as it may seem, neither Captain Heath nor Buck Buly suspected what had been done until the Indian had des-cu. i. l, and was beyond their reach.

"My God, Captain, this is too much?" exclaimed the sec. "I feel as though I could tear to pieces every one of Acese demons."

"Don't get excited," admonished the officer, vainly on leasuring to conceal his own emotion. "How short-sighted to to an assemble when he was within our clutches. But it is to be to recify it for the present. Suppose, while I take a suppose it from the win low, you ascend to the gravet above, and if it out what you can; then return to me, and we will decide what is to be done."

The suggestion of Captain Heath was immediately adopted by the scout, who, on tirtoe, made his way to the room above

The first glance that he cast outsile discovered an alarming and startling fact. Not more than a handred yards from him were six strange Indians, who had evidently just arrived. Thugwan and Butler were engaged in a bing with them, and but a short distance away was discernible the body of a white man, which the scout had no difficulty in deciding was that of Robert, the coachman of Mr. Gardner.

Buck Bailey descended at once, and communicated with Captain Heath.

"That places fighting for the present out of the question," said he. "Let us make efforts to conceal ourselves, and, as they do not feel very suspicious of any one's presence in the building, besides those they have already seen, we have a good opportunity of escaping."

"But, Captain, suppose they should pounce upon a chap! ha! ha! What'll he do? Call out they ain't playing fair, and make them go back while he hiles himself over again?"

"If you are found, and need my help, just make the signal, and Catfoot, I have no doubt, will be with you as quick as myself."

"No fear of my making any signal, for if I get into a scrape, I think it will be enough without dragging you in also There's no mistake, Cap, we're in a tight box; but I believe the good Lord has helped me out of as tight ones as this."

"You remain here while I make a short observation from you stand-point," said Captain Heath, as he made his way into the garret. When he looked forth, he saw nothing at all, from which he concluded the Inlians, spoken of by Back Bailey, had already entered the building.

Satisfied of this, he turned to descend, but had taken but a step or two when he abruptly passed. Feet were useen ling the lower stairs, and he knew that the search had begun!

Buck Bailey had not detected the danger until it was two late to attempt to warn Captain Heath. As he heard the first ascending the stairs, he realized that but a moment remained for him to conceal himself. His first impulse was to harry above and join his friend; but he checked himself. The gar ret offered no secure hiding-place, and the creaking stairs would be sure to discover him to the sharp cars of the Indiana.

His next impulse was to hasten out of the room into another; but his quick discernment told him that he could not better his simulton by doing so. He therefore glanced hurriedly about him to see what could be done. His eye sparkled as it rested upon the fire board behind him. Stepping sodiy across the room, he pulled it as it and ensconced himself herbind it.

The hope of escaping by this performance would have been as down as that of the ostrich that hopes to chale its parents, by hiding its head behind a bush, while its body remains in fall view. Buck Builey knew well choose him that no Indian would look into that room without examining the fire-board, and he, therefore, cast an anxious look above him.

The chimney was constructed of stones, which had been bill with such poor skill that numerous produblinances remained, upon which it was no difficult to there to preserve a fording, after once obtaining it. The fire place having been used but comparatively a few times, there was not much soot to among and frustrate his attempts.

It cost the scout considerable effort; but he speceded in getting his body in a position where it could not be soon, unless the person seeking him should bok up the chinney. At out two feet above the opening of the fireplace he found a resting place for his left toot, and a little above that, upon the opposite side, another for his other foot. Standing thus, he carefully listened.

The Indians were already up in the second if or; but they had a moment to view the remains of the will a word and set. Had they not done so, Back Baley would never have been given the opportunity to hide himself. They remained there but a short time, however, when three went to the carret wove, while two entered the room which hald the face place. The second heard their tread and their values. They was conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in the conversing in their native tongue, every world of which he is least the conversing in the conversion.

"We have got but three scalps," said one; "the Captain will not let the heads of the old man and the young girl be toucked."

"There may be more within the house," replied the other; we have not examined every part. There may be pappooned or children that have been hid away. Their scalps are obtained easy, and must hang at our girdle."

"Thugwan, the Cayura, has got those of the woman and the man that lies on the ground. He tried to run away.

Ugh! agh! oogh! oogh! ugh!"

Here both savages indulged in loud, guttural laughter, so they pictured the panic-stricken man, fleeing for life, in the vain hope to escape his relentless enemies. These ebullations having subsided, they continued their conversation. It seemed that one of these savages was a member of the party that had pursued the messengers of Colonel Gansevoort, whate the other had arrived but a few minutes before—just soon enough to witness the death of the coachman. It was the former who now spoke.

"Two messengers from Fort Schuyler went down the ever to Albany. We see them."

"But I see nothing of their scalps."

"When they were within our hands, they escaped, ara will soon be in Albany, where they will get more men, and drive St. Leger away."

The Indian gave utterance to a lugubrious lament, as he called to mind the miscarriage of their attempt to capture the two messengers. It was evident that neither of them had much hope of finding any one in the building, and during the conversation they made no attempt to search it.

"We go to Cherry Valley," added the first speaker; "the Captain must be there to-morrow."

"What takes him there?"

"He carries a big paper. He reads it loud to every body that listens. The Big Butler made it, and it is going to get a good many men for him."

"The men are wanted, for the Yengese fight like braves."

"There can be none hid in this room unless behind that painted board."

The critical moment had come! The scout heard one of the Indians walk across the floor, and approach the fire-place

He was compelled to insinuate his fingers between the upper edge of the board and the stones to pull it out, and lost some satience before it yielded.

"There is no one there," said the savage, throwing the board back with such violence that the rebound caused it to fall upon the floor.

" The Finger may hide in the chivney at me."

The heart of Back Bailey give a creat throb as he heard this remark of the savage. He believed his enemies were aware all the time that he was concluded there, and had been trilling with his fear as a cut toys with a mouse before destroying it.

"We will then brown him where he is."

'No you won't, neither," thought Buck Bailey, growing despérate at his situation.

A second time one of the savages approached the fire-place. He merely replaced the board, without glancing up the chimney. The scout had been mistaken in believing they knew of his concediment. It was only a casual remark of the Indian, who little imagined in what close proximity he was to a fee whose scalp would have caused rejoicing through the lodges of the Six Nations.

In the meantime, the situation of Captain Heath was by no means the most comfortable in the world. His foot was already on the stairs, when he caught the sound of his enemies asceroling, and instantly drew back again.

Not having each ded upon concealing himself in this portion of the horse, he was disconcerted a second time by the action of the fallians. Gluncing harriedly around the room, he descript nothing but a mass of rubbich in one corner, coasising in stly of broken familiare and old clothes. The surest way of discovery would have been to hide beneath them.

Feeling that worst must come to worst, he took his position at the head of the stairs, with his ritle clubbed, and detrained to brain the savages the in tant their heads ap part I A morner ary delay, however, in the lower story give him opportunity for thought.

For the first time, Captain II oth's eye lit upon a trap-doo in the roof, of which he roof at once to avail himself. It was situated near the end of the house, in close proximity to the large stone channey; and, as he pressed upon it, it readily yielded, and he ascended to the roof.

Here he was in imminent danger of being seen by some upon the outside of the building; but the least that could be said of the situation of every factive in that house was, that it was extremely perilous, and the officer certainly had taken the wisest course.

As he emerged upon the roof, its steepness came within a hair's breekh of precipitating him to the ground. With much difficulty he chambered to the opposite side, until at length he reached the chimney, where he managed to secure a precarious foothold.

A few moments later, three Indians came into the room which he had left, and looked around them. The first proceeding was to toss the rubbish hither and thither, then to upset an empty barrel that stood by. These failing to reveal any thing, they turned to descend, when, as might have been expected, the eye of one of the scamps caught sight of the trap door.

"Womder Yougese live on top of house!" said he, pointing to the aperture. "Go out dere in warm weather, and get much warm."

"If he loss not live there, then he may hide there."

"I will go out on top of the house," added the first speaker.

A slight pressure threw the trap-door upward, so that it of red no obstruction to their progress; and, placing his two hards upon the sides, he made a powerful and most graceful leap out upon the roof. Old Indian as he was, he might have known better. Where Captain Heath had been able to save himself only by the greatest care, it may well be supposed what were the coasequences of such a proceeding as this upon the part of the Mohawk.

The imports given his body by his leap, carried him to was I what a momentum that coald not be overcome. A cas is biserver which have supposed that, in squatting up in the cost, and shift is vitely downward, he was taking a voluntary the, somewhat after the manner of a boy in going down hill pon his shelt. But, if any thing ever was involuntary, it was that descent of the Mohawk. Turning over on his face, he clutched frantically at the shingles, hammering his toes downward with a force that nearly drove them through the thingles.

All was useless. The aborigine glided downward swiftly, slideff surely, and came to the ground tremendously. The shock that he received was never forgotten by the savage to his dying day.

The two remaining Indians, with their heads projecting than the trop-door, grinned audibly as their unbrucked on period despreamed from view, and they have been deal than p s he struck the ground.

boy." 'Wa anto-warah loves to play!" sail one; "he is yet a

"He loves to slide down hill. Warm to-ward, is fill of the rt as when he was young. He makes the loop of the build, but he falls again as if shot."

"Shall we not follow him?"

As the conversation of these two In lines was in no ways set; us, neither of them made the attempt to go out upon the roof. They merely looked around them, drew in their be als, and descended to the lower part of the house. In tact, it may be said, that not one of the savares expected to find any person in the house beside those they had almady seen; hence their search was not so minute as it otherwise would have been. Had they really suspect I the presence of others, not one of them would have escaped discovery for an hour.

Captain Heath waited until certain he included no danger, when he re-entered through the trap-door, leaving it madesel, as the Indians had done. Before verturing to do could be took his position at the head of the stars, and his net.

All was profoundly still, and he was about to describ and in Back Balley, when, for the third time, he here I for assert if gather lower stairs. Feeling prefly positive that they well not come into the room which he occupied, had had to ve, only to prepare himself for a proci, it dealight to the roof in case he miscalculated.

A mount of later he detected the voice of Batler, and then a reply han Mr. Gardner, from which he intered that the Tory was itingly hills prisoners to the second at ry for the party of security. Shoully after, the histories hugh of Hony at Schuyler reached his ears, and he became fully satisfied that his first supposition was correct.

permitted, Captain Heath determined to effect his escape. From words which he had overheard, he was made aware of the intention of Butler, and he had strong hopes that he edid benefit the two captives in his hands. It tried him sorely to be hiding in the building, when old age and detence a womanhood demanded his services; but, for the present, is ould not be otherwise. Once fairly beyond the hous, where all his thoughts were not necessarily occupied in attending to his own safety, he could think and operate to some purpose Night at length slowly settled over the wood, field, and river—a night that, while quite dark, still had sufficient light in it, to render his undertaking full of danger. Once in rehe emerged from the trap-door and passed to look atomed him. No form was visible upon either side of the house.

Slowly and cautiously Captain He ath made his way along the peak of the roof, until he had reached the end furthest removed from the chimney. Then he felt his way toward the caves. It required extreme care to avoid the catastrophe that befold the Indian, to prevent his hands and feet from making too much noise.

At the caves, he succeeded in letting his bely down upon the roof of a lower portion of the house, from which he was not afraid to spring to the ground. The roof of this prived to be more steeply shelving than the one he had just hea, and in spite of his utmost efforts to prevent it, he could not save himself from sliding off.

The fall was but a few teet, and his only anxiety was, lest his precipitation might attract notice from some of the I. The As he struck the ground, he key upon his face and him. He could hear the marmir of voices within, but could be tanguish no words. Peching pretty condition that has as an away not noticed, he arose and walked rapidly away toward the wood, but had not gone a dozen steps, when he saw an Ladian issue from the house and start toward norm.

Had there been no others in the neighborn of his said to say he would not have fiel; but, as it was, he had every reason to get as far away from the house as provided the same, and what is more, gained very fast upon him.

do

Finding he must be shortly overtaken, Captain Heath wheeled suddenly around and raised his rifle.

"Ugh! Cap'n run much very fist!"

The officer lowered his gun, as he recognized the form and scice of Catfoot, the Oneida.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE RECONNOITER.

Catroot's first thought after getting into the cellar, was to find a way to get out again. There were two windows in the stone wall, just above the surface of the ground. Across these were stretched parallel bars, which, upon examination, instead of wood, proved to be solid iron, and were as firmly imbadded in the stone, as if the cellar had been constructed for a criminal prison. The Oneida was somewhat taken aback at this, for he had counted upon an easy egress from the cellar. He was confident that he could in time make his way out, but he had not the time to spere. Events transpiring above, called for prompt action.

While the dusky savage was thus cogitating, he heard the shulling of feet overhead, and the door a maicating with the celler opened. Quick as hi himing, he can be back into a corner, where the light secreely reached him, and waited for the approach of his foe.

In a moment, a pair of moccasine I feet were visible, and place were quickly followed by the legs and body of Malacak. The heart of the Oneita happal, as he saw there was but one enemy to encounter, and his hand sought the least of his kalls. There was no danger of his avoiding this foe

From the action of the Mohank, it was evident he was bearcaing for other things then concealed regitives. Pots and jars in great numbers were around him. He laked the covers of several and pecred in. As his eyes rested upon the dark mass of sweetments, he poked his finger downward, and then drew it through his mouth. The sweet taste filled his soul with delight, and he instantly drew out several handsful, and put them in his mouth, much after the manner of a thieving tirchia. This he repeated to several other jurs, until he had go mandized himself, when he deliberately turned over all the preserve jurs, broke them, and dabbled his feet in the ticky mixture with the keenest enjoyment.

Still unconscious of the doom gluing out upon him from the hilling place in the dim corner, the savage continued, graping hither and thither, coming nigher and nigher all the time, until he was almost in striking distance.

At the very moment the Oneila was on the point of making his noiseless leap, the Mohawk, in obelience most likely to a whim, sprang up the step and disappeared almost instantly. Fortunate, indeed, was he; for the Dark Angel was close to him in that moment.

The indiscriminate manner in which the savages were strolling over the house, gave Cathoot an idea which he was not long in carrying out. He felt pretty certain that if he should pass up the steps in his own easy, natural manner, his identity would not be suspected unless he should have a direct encounter with some one.

The lam of voices, and the noise of moving feet, proved to the One that his enemies still were within the bell it z. For one purpose of greater security, Cathot deferred his project antil complete durkness had come. At the moment that (up an Helen was critiously making his way along the root, the Gacida had decided to carry out the determination he had made some time before. His plan was simply to well sto vir with a "cateless carefulness" up stairs, open the dear and pass out ite, where his course wound acpend up or creams, eaces

His flot was upon the stairs, when the loor above of and some one economical descending. At such a time, the certain could be but involved in complete dataless; so the had no copie, Cathor might have withdrawn and complete himself; but he can either more dangerous corse, and electrical the stranger when he had about half descented. The latter appeared somewhat startled at the encounter. He does back and addressed Cathor, who made a suitable reply.

without pausing. Seemingly satisfied, the Indian continued his descent. The Oneida opened the door and passed into the room with which it communicated. It was enveloped in senf-darkness, but there was sufficient light for him to distinguish the forms of Batler and Thugwan, conversing together.

Cathot manifested no trepidation, but walked toward the door, when the Tory called to him and inquired where he was going. He made an indefinite answer and passed out. Whether it was the intonation of his voice (which was quited deficient from any of the Mohawks) or whether the suspicions of Thogwan were aroused, he was uncertain. But he saw something was wrong, for he had not taken a dozen steps, when the door reopened behind him, and the Cayuga appeared. Could the Oneida have succeeded in leading him at a safe distance from the building, where there could be no interference between them, he would have been willing to less a limb for the sake of such an encounter. But such was not to be the case, for the Cayuga almost instantly withdrew, and was seen no more.

Heath, whom he recognized at once, but did not dare to address him until he was further removed from the building. Then, as we have alrealy shown, the Captain discovered the identity of his pursuer, and the two congratulated each other upon their successful escape.

"Where Buck?" inquired Catfoot.

"He is still in the house."

"Mohawk got him?"

"No; I think not."

"Who den, Butler?"

"I do not be leve any one has him. He has hid himself somewhere, and I I think he is safe for the present."

"Where you lebe him?"

and of his own flight; after which, the Oneida expressed himself satisfied.

"What we do now?" he is quired.

"Do you know, Catloot, what is pretty certain about Butler and those Indians with him? They will leave the building to-night."

" Where go to?"

" fo Cherry Valley."

- "What go dere for?" inquired the savage, in his quick, sent intious manner.
- not tell. He is in somewhat of a hurry to reach the valley mid se will take most of the Indians with him. Work do not think about it?"

".Junno nothin'-haint told me."

Overheard. The belief seemed to impress the Oneida, although he made no hasty admission to his companion. Being now far removed from the building, they decided to remain where they were for an hour or two, and then to approach the noise to reconneiter it, ascertaining, if possible, what the intentions of Builer really were.

"If It jin go way—Fajin stay dere," remarked Cattoot, a lew moments later.

"I suppose so; if those they leave behind are not more than had a dozen, we'll make short work with them."

"Maybe Thugwan be there," added the Oneida in a tone which portrayed the dearest wish of his heart.

"I hardly think so, as he and Butler seem in rable.

And indeed they are a well mated pair."

The time allotted were slowly away. They kept the seyes fixed in the direction of the house, but saw here is until they were about to start, when a bright star like point of light suddenly flashed to view. The Onei hap inted to it.

"Butler dere-Injins, don't do it."

"I suppose he has struck a light. It may be eil Mr.

Jardner-Edith, who has done it."

Maybe Back," added Cathoot, in a voice that Captain supposed was meant to refer to the jeesse style in?

se all generally had of doing business,

"Hereby. He would not be desirous of incurring such a risk, especially when there can be no possible need of it. You feel certain, Catfoot, that none of the red skins have struck the light?"

"Know as-whites do it."

"In that case, we will wait somewhat longer before we approach.

The light continued thinkling and glimmering like a star across the heris, as if to becken on the two watchers. It was comparatively early in the night, when they started toward it. They had not gone half the distance, when they discovered that it was in the second story. This encouraged Captur Herch. He pressed forward with a more rapid tex, until a thenly are seed by the hand of Catfoot.

"'Sh," he whispered. "See 'em?"

Servicing his gaze into the darkness, Heath detected several dark bodies, not coming toward, but by them, following such a directive, that they would approach but a few feet closer.

This proximity falling to discover their number or identity cither to Captain Heath or the Oncida, the latter dropped on his heads and "galloped" silently toward them. Both parties disappeared so rapilly, that the officer was at a loss to locate them. A few minutes later, however, Cathot, erect and deliberate, made his appearance.

"Who were they?" inquired Captain Heath, in a harried, Carritine.

"M Lawks."

" No one che?"

" Heter and Thugwan there-trabel fast -in hurry-leave old man and gal behind."

The young officer could scarce conceal an exclamation of joy. He wall have started on a run for the building, had be not been restrained by the deliberate Oncida.

" Too much harry hal-Mohawk find out-kill gal and old man."

"II w many have they left at the building?"

" Honyost dere-"

Captain Heath could not restrain a leigh.

"A por feel, he will do no harm. If he is the sole

"Iri a dere too-dunno how many."

At this moment, the outlines of the building became visible, and the two halted for a moment's conversation, then the Oneida moved forward to ascertain the precise situation of affairs

CHAPTER IX.

BUCK BAILEY'S INTRODUCTION.

As the day crept slowly along, Buck Bailey began to grow no months able in his sooty hiding place. It was no easy natter to stand hour after hour in his constrained position, and when finally he heard the two saveres with how it me the room, he crept cautiously out from the fire-place and stretched his limbs.

"Ha! ha!" he laughed. "It's lucky for me that it isn't cold to-day. If they had taken it upon themselves to bailed a fire, I might have got a good toasting!"

The good-natured scout was himself again, and laughed and joked with himself in his usual manner. This finished, he took upon himself to ascertain the deings and intentions of those below stairs. He could hear the passage of feet and the hum of voices, as did the Oneida, but was unable to catch any words. As a consequence, he remained entirely in the dark, regarding their movements until night, when he heard feet upon the stairs, and hastily scrambled back to his concealment.

He soon ascertained the comers to be Butler, Honyes' Schuyler, Mr. Gardner, and Edith. The first said as he entered:

"You will stay here till you hear from me again. I am going to Cherry Valley to-night with most of my Indians, but will leave Thugwan and Honyost to take care of you."

"I am your guest, Captain Butler. Treat my daughter and myself as you please. You have perpetrated edd-the led murder to-day. We are defenceless, and in your power—"

"What is the use of talking?" demanded the Tory, with an oath.

"No one intends to hurt you. You are loyal to King George, and that is sufficient to project you."

If I live, St. Leger and Colonel Butler shall hear of this."

"Bak!" exclaimed Butler, impatiently. "You might well stop your riginarole. If I thought there was any danger of harm coming to me for that, you would never report it! Do you understand?" Le asked, with a quiet si nificance.

The threat was fully understood, and Mr. Gardner knew it was no idle one. If the whim should take the man, he would not he state to imbrue his hands in the blood of both himself to day dater. The old man was therefore more guarded in is reparts. As for Edith, her scorn of Butler, effectually tend for mouth. She would not back at him, answer a give question, or show by any word or sign that she was conscious of his presence. Butler could but see this haughty in liference, and it galled him sorely. He pointedly addressed her several times, and foully made several covert threats, but with no species, except to make himself feel smaller than ever in his own eye.

"What is to be the final disposal of us?" Mr. Gardner ventured to inquire.

of the Colonel's, and to raise a breeze generally in that neighborhood. In case all things go along nice-like, you can go back to your home in the same manner that you came; but, if the sieze of Fort Schuyler is raised, all I have got to say is, look out for yourselves."

"Look out for ourselves?" repeated Mr. Gardner, in astonishment." "And why must we do that?"

to be dangerous, you know, when they expect a lot of sealps, and dea't get 'em. They're not partickler whose they take. If we may ver, I must be off. Remember not to undertake to run away, for there will be a releskin down stairs with his eyes up a you, and Mr. Gardner, you know what a red skin is at such times."

""I car ally know what one who provends to be a white man is."

"Will, good by-good by, Mes Elith. You will probably see me in a few days again."

With this parting salutation the Tory hurried down stairs. In a few maments, he returned with a light, hade them goodby a second time, and shortly after took his departure with most of his sayage followers.

When assured that they were really gone, Edith dropped into a seat beside her father, and drew a deep sigh. As she looked up in his face, a droll thought came into her acad, and she laughed in spite of herself.

for me to marry a good loyalist, that is, if I ever married.

How would Captain Butler suit you?"

"God ferbid!" replied the purent, in horrified amagement

"Well, he proposed for my hand that evening when he last called at our house. My refusal has brought this trouble upon him."

"Curse him?" exclaimed Mr. Gardner, bitterly; "who ever supposed he would treat his friends in this manner?"

"Which would you prefer for a son-in-law, Captain Butler, or Captain Heath?"

"Don't talk of it, daughter-don't talk of it."

"What do you think of Buck Bailey, the scout ?"

"A thousand times preferable—a thousand times preferable."

"So think I, indeed-what's that ?"

A singular noise was heard behind the fire-board, as if some person were dancing with might and main. Then a hearty but suppressed hugh reached their ears. The board was shoved aside, and the genial face of the scout appeared, all aglow with smiles and good humor.

"I'm really 'bliged, Miss Edith, for your good opinion of Back Bailey, and I'm 'bliged to you, Mr. Gardner, also, for the same thing."

Both laurised, and the girl answered:

"You have been listening, Buck, I'm afrail."

"Couldn't help it. I was there fust, and you fellered my 'stead of my foliering you, I didn't think to step my cars at you got through talking."

"But let us find how matters stand," said Mr. Gaster, in a more serious tone. "Have you been concoded in that chimney all day? and do you know any thing of Copials Heath, or of the Oneila Indian who was with him? They were somewhere in the building at the time Butter entered it. I am anxious to hear what has become of them?

"I think they both managed to get out of the such by come means or other. But depend on't, they're close at hand, and it won't be many minutes before we'll hear some thing of them. That Catfoot is a sly dog, and I'll warrant he's counted every redskin and white that has left this building. He'll wait till they get a safe distance, and then he'll be in here in a twinkling. I'm thinking if there's an Injin down stairs on the watch, it won't be long before that same Injin will get himself into a scrimmage that he isn't think ing of."

" What do you mean ?"

"If Carloot isn't here in half an hour I shall go down and 'tend to him myself; 'cause he must be disposed of any ways."

"There must be more than one."

"Think not. If there is, they ain't together, so there'll be only one at a time. But that Cayuga, that they call Thugwan is equal to half a dozen. I'd hate to deprive Catfoot of the pleasure of a set-to with him, for they hate each other worse then brothers."

"Bit there is Honyost Schuyler."

Buck Bailey laughed so suddenly and loudly that he assumed at once a supernatural gravity, and listened to ascertain whethere there was any evidence of his having betrayed himself. The noise had probably reached the ears of some one below, for feet upon the stairs were almost immediately heard. The scout listened a moment, and then said, in an exultant whisper:

"That is Honyost, sure as I live! Don't speak of me, and we'll have some amusement on our own account."

Saying which he whisked behind the fire-board, and awaited the coming of Butler's satellite.

As Honyost Schuyler was about to confront the man who also often occupied the place of master over him, and the women who, while she had also held the same position, still wielled her power gently and indulgingly, it must be conceded to a he experienced peculiar feelings.

Their positions were now reversed, and he was to be guardian or juilor of them both. He whose proper position was that of a menial, and whose situation just now might be said to be that of a "fish out of water," was to assume the control of a man who had governed others while he was yet unborn, and who seemed fitted by nature and birth to rule those beneath him.

As the awkward bumpkin strad fled slowly up stairs, it cannot be denied but that he did an immense lot of thinking. In the first place, he knew Mr. Gardner to be one of the rankest sort of royalists, and why he should be held in durance vile was more than his simple soul could understand. He truly imagined that the daughter was some way mixe hup in the affair, but the exact position she occupied he still failed to understant. He argued that he would not pursue such a course to win the affections of any lady for himself, and his ingenuous logic filled him with grave doubts as to the success of Captain Butler if he continued in this line of action.

However, these were but minor matters; and, think as he might, he had been given a duty which he dare not fail to perform. Butler, for whom he entertained as much terror as did thousands of rebels, at a later day, of another, but more noble Butler, had commanded him to assist the Cayuza in guarding the prisoners, until his return from Cherry Valley. This duty he was determined to perform, as long as his safety and life were in no danger.

When, therefore, he opened the door, it was with a countenance upon which no irresolution or timility could be detected. With the air of master and dictator, he greated the two with a sort of condescension, and then quietly took a seat beside them.

The horrors of the day, the gloom and doubt of the hotalited so weighted upon the broyant spirits of Elith, that she was silent and thoughtful, and felt no desire to enter into the fistivity proposed by the scout. The father, on the contrary, was inclined to attempt any joke that could possibly product the man. He, therefore, returned his salutation, and a limit

- " Are you all alone in the builling, Honyost?"
- "Thugwan is down stairs."
- "Why did you have him?"
- "I didn't ask for him. Cap'n Butler, I s'pose, thought is best to leave him. Didn't see what he wanted to leave him for, though."
 - "I suppose he saw that you were afraid to attempt to guard us unless there was some one to share the danger with you."

- "Hew! haw! haw!" hurched Honyost, boisterously. "Me affect!? Do you think there's anything that could skear one?"
- "There's no need for thinking. We know you are a cow ard ?"
 - " No, sir; there ain't nothin' that can make me wink"
- "Det you recollect the time when we had you at our is set that you imagined a bush to be a bear, and we could not have you to go outside of the door until Edith went before you as I carried the light? I think you will never forget hat time."
- "H.w! haw! haw! a little fan of mine. I was just print the grad, that's all. I min't the man to be frightened, I tell you agin."

"Still se some one should attempt to rescue us?"

- "Let him try it," vaunted Honyest, who did not fail to retretainer the serious obstacle he would encounter in the shape if T. gran, the Cryuga, ore he could enter the building "I to a try it, I say, and you'd see where he would be."
- "Yes into I, then, to keep us here until Butler returns from Cherry Valley?"
 - "Them's the orders he has left."
- Cou't you?"
- "Tunt's the idee, I believe; so, you see, you're fast till he comes back."
- ing what then?"
- Dotter to do it, Mr. Garlher. You know I wouldn't the total terms of the gal; but if I should let year, s, that the term of sector year to thus quick as theh. The dag is to be expected here if ye rhead so much, that if in do it to be to be an one after long, I believe held try me."

come to our as istance?"

"It's ongoes, ie," replied Honyost, shaking his head; "it couldn't be del. That Cayuga has been looking for him for over a year, and when he once gets sight of him, he'll rub him out like a chalk mark."

"It wouldn't be necessary for him to bother with the others, as you would attend to them?"

"Of course! I'm ready for all, big or little, short or tall they con't come more than two at a time."

" Suppose Captain Heath should appear?"

- "Haw! I'd fling him out the window afore he'd hav
 - " Suppose it were Buck Bailey, the scout?"
- "How: haw! I'd smouth him! Hello-what's that noise in the channey?"
- "Perhaps some of the stones or mortar work falling down. So you would not be afraid of that scout?"
- "Afeard of him!" repeated Honyost, with an expression of the most intense scorn. "I tell you I'd smash kin! There must be something behind that fire-board."

"The speediest way to find that out is to go and look for yourself."

Honyest was about to refuse; but, recellecting the extravagreat beasts he had just made, he rose up and strode resolutely toward the chimney.

He was about to reach out his hand to grasp it, when the board dropped, with a dall flap, to the floor, and there, croached and glaring behind it, he saw Back Balley, the scout!

For a moment he was transfixed with amazement; then, as he showed numistakable symptoms of retreating, the mot. aless score, with ut once removing his eyes from him, in a voice like the muttering of thunder, uttered the single words:

" Don't stir !"

The stricken wretch did not stir. He did not heel the launting heigh of both Mr. Gardner and Edith. It was no until Back Bailey emerged from the chimney-place that he spoke. Then he reached out his hand, giving utterance a the same time to a boisterous laugh.

"How'd you do, Back? Hung me if I ain't glad to see

The genial scout strove to hold the unwonted expression of fierceness upon his face; but he could not. It would relax, and he laughed he crilly, but not loudly, for he did not forget that he had a formishible enemy down stairs.

"I've been there all day, Honyost. Why didn't you come "Haw! haw! diln't know you was there, or I woul!

Fry! I'm glad to see you, Buck, no mistake."

So am I to see you," and the scout, glancing at Mr. Gard are and Edith, laughed till the tears ran down i is checked But why are you so pleased to see me? Be careful and not talk too loud."

"'Cause why," said the Tory, assuming a confidential whisper, "you see, Cap'n Butler has left me here to watch these tolks, and I'm bound to help 'em off, and was trying to think how I could outwit that red skin down stairs when you showed yourself. Wan't it good? Haw! haw! Look out; there comes Thugwan!" exclaimed Honyost, as he heard a step upon the stairs."

Back Builey listened, and knew at once that it was not the step of an Indian that he heard.

"It is Captain Heath Limself," said he, in a harried whister. You must hide, Honyost, for he'll tear you to pieces if Le sees you! Into the chimney; quick! quick!"

Honyost, excited and frightened, danced up and down like a crazy person, and then shot in behind the fire-board, and just as it was replaced behind him, Captain Heath entered the room.

CHAPTER X.

THE SAVAGE CONTEST.

Thuswas, the Cayuga, anticipating no enemies from the outside, remained within the building, where it would be impossible for one of its intraces to pass out without first attracting his attention. So confident was he of the utter tutility of any effort to escape upon the part of the prisoners, that he lay down upon the floor, and folded his arms in sleen

The slumber of the American Indian is proverbially light. As he was not directly beneath Mr. Gardner's room, the noise made in their conversation and movements disturbed him but in a small degree. Not dreaming that any one beside Honyost Schnyler could be with them, and unable to note the works, or even the tones of the different speakers, he accost tomed himself to the hum, and, in a comparatively short time became unconscious.

A sound, however, aroused the Cayuga. Unclosing it eyes, he lay, without moving a muscle, and bent all his tac I ties into that of attention. It required but a moment for him to discover that some one was at work upon the cutsile of the door.

Rising silently to his feet, he walked as quietly as the roused panther to the door and listened. It seems to him that some one was simply pushing against it, without attempting anything else. Feeling certain that if it were an enemy acting in this manner, it was no one whom he need dread, he asked, in broken English:

" Who dere ?"

The pressure instantly ceased, and he heard footstops, as if some one was retreating.

A few moments later, the quick ear of the Inlian detected precisely the same sound at the rear door. Whisking to this, he again listened. The entrance was secured by means of ponder us bars, but this did not prevent its yielding stightly to a comparatively small pressure. It seemed to him that a body was pressed regularly, but with small force, and so the door, much in the same manner as might be expressed from a dog or some other domestic animal.

As the voices above were still an lible, it was cert in they had nothing to lo with it. Determine I to under the I this mystery, the Cayura carefully let down the lars, at less are take opened the door. The instant he drew it inwell he heard the same sound of retreating feetsteps, and here I is prospect. He can let a climpse of a shallowy body, resemble 5 that of a parson, as it fifted rapidly before him. It chiled his grasp until a lumined yards or so from the house, when it suddenly turned, and he found himself face to face with an Indian!

50

"Who are you, and what do you want?" he demanded in Iroquois.

"I am Catfoot, the Oneida. I have come for the scalp of Tungwan, the Cayuga," replied his enemy in the same tongue.

At last the two enemies were face to face! They, who work each other with an intensity of hatred which only the American savage can feel, who had sought each other for no that each of whom had vowed to take the scalp of the other or lose his own in the effort; these mortal enemies were now to meet in deadly encounter.

They confronted each other like tigers at buy. Each was exhibit and confident. The prisoners might now quietly walk out of the house, and yet fail to draw away their guardien, the Cayura, from the coveted combat, while nothing shout of the death-cry of Back Bailey himself would have drawn the black flushing orbs of the Oneida from the counternact of his opponent. The light afforded them was just sufficient for each distinctly to see the movements of the other.

The Caynga was a most brutal and merciless savage. Like B. r Linself he sparel no age nor sex. He had dashed out the brains of many a prattling infant, and tomahawked a score of trembling paralytics. His name was notorious as one vin a circ no quarter to any, and who especially had outraged 2.15 ... many and many a maiden that had been placed in Lis power He was a skilful and a very dangerous man. He tore a particular in dice toward Carfoot. In the first place, ti. v were both members of the Six Nations, and while the L. . is wof these had followed the councils of the Johnsons a. . i then siles with the British, many others-am my whom was this O mile-had joined the Americans and forght a big BIL ir diase. Cathout had become distinguished by the I. .. ref scalps be had taken from the Cayuans and Mo-to the lis own. A chivalrous Indian, who slew none except warriors, Le, if possible, received their more deadly enmity on tims very account.

The two combatants did not long remain idle. Drawing one foot backward, the Cayuga made a sudden spring at his made. Catfoot warded the blow at his breast and striking outward, with a success which was unexpected to himself, he buried his knite in the bosom of the Cayugu. The latter with a dismal howl dropped heavily to the earth, while the Oncida scalped him with amazing dexterity, and then exaltingly flaunted the disgusting trophy in his face. Thugwan died toically if not as a genuine hero. Not another word escaped him, nor did a muscle or movement show that he regarded the tantalizing action of his triumphant adversary.

Catroot dangled the scalp again and again over his face, called him woman, boasted of his own prowess, and the number of Caynga warriors he had slain, and of the vast number that was still destined to fall by his hand, he spell every imaginable in salt and indignity upon him, and only ceased when he saw that the famous warrior of the Iroquois was deal.

The success of Catfoot, as we have stated, surprised himself. He had counted upon a long and deadly hand-to kend conflict with his enemy, in which he expected to receive many severe cuts and wounds, and in which it was not improbable that he would be placed hors du conclut for a season. When, therefore, Thugwan fell mortally wounded at the first blow, he was exultant beyond measure. The blow, in fact, was one of those fortunate accidents for the victor, that sometimes occur in such encounters, and was not due to the superior prowess of the Oneida himself.

Catfoot had made Captain Heath promise not to approach them, during the combat, even if he should judge that his enemy were worsting him, as he had concluded that the mater should be decided between themselves alone. Like a true savage, he had no desire for life if his enemy should triamph over him.

In reconnoitering the building, he discovered that some one was acting as a scatined in the lower story; and, knowing that it was necessary to dispose of him, before he could happe to rescue the prisoners, and in twishing to altrusthem, by bringing on the conflict in the badding, he resorted to the means we have noted for drawing his enemy beyond the house. It was not until Thugwan addressed him, that he discovered his identity, when, as we have seen, the combat at once assumed the character of a struggle for a long-sought prize which was now within reach of his hand.

Captain Heath stood close by the building, an agitated and apprehensive listener to the conflict. Its brevity surprised and alarmed him; and when he discerned through the groom a single Indian coming toward him, he was in doubt what course to pursue. He was soon relieved, by the voice of Catfoot.

"Me got him! Dat Thugwan's scalp," said he, holding to the trophy before him as he approached.

"Why, it took you but a short time to do it. You must have fought well."

Catfoot, usually so stolid and indifferent, could not, for the moment, conceal his gratification at the success which had crowned his t-id of prowess with his noted adversary. He continued dangling and sporting with it, and remarking upon his achievement for several minutes. Captain Heath waited until the flush of his triumph was over, and then said:

"Suppose you go above and join our friends?"

"Me stay here and watch, you go up. May be Injin come back."

"Do you think there is danger of any of them returning?"

"Danno-mebbe so-guess not."

With this assurance Captain Heath entered the house and assented the stairs, at the moment that Honyost Schuyler slid behind the fire-board.

CHAPTER_XI.

THE JOKE AND THE CASTLE DESERTED.

CAPTAIN HEATH entered the room in which sat Mr. Garder and Edith, and where stood Buck Bailey. The former greeted him more kindly than he ever before had done

"I am sorry you have been so unfortunate," said the Captain, in a tone of respectful sympathy. "I thought Captain Lutler stood upon good terms with you."

"So has he stood, but his course has been nothing but an outrage. At the earliest opportunity I shall inform St. Leger of this, and he will see that he is properly panished."

" He certainly forgot himself to act thus in the presence of your daughter-"

"Oh! the infernal villain!" exclaimed Mr. Garliner, losing all patience. "There ain't a greater scoundrel in the provences than he. If the safety of our cause must be placed in the lab in hands as his, it deserves to fail!"

Coptain Heath could not forbear a sly look at Elith, a trace words were uttered, and slae, in turn, half smiled; never before heat she heard such a concession from her parent.

- "Yes, they seem to fail!" he added angrily. "King George has enough good, loyal soldiers to sweep every rebel from the earth, without calling in the help of Indians and such men as Butler."
 - "You, I suppose, were left here under guard?"
- "Yes, that painted Indian, that follows him like a shadow, and who, I suppose, has killed scores of people, keeps watch below, ready to pounce upon us if we attempt to go out."

"He is not there now."

"What do you mean, sir?"

" He is dead-has been dead several minutes."

"Ah! you have finished him, I suppose."

"No; it was not I who did it. Cathoot and he had a conflict, in which the Onci la was victorious. I suppose, Thurwan, as they call him, was as fiendish as his master; hat his scalping days are done, and babes and children and was entangled may now draw their breath in peace."

"This is good news indeed, for I detested the sight of that gavage. Butler brought him to our house once or twice, the I forbil him. He looked so repulsive, that I never felt easy with him near."

"You understand, then, that you are perfectly free to go where you please. Without presuming to dictate, I would urge you to leave the house at once, for there is no telling, when some of Batler's Indians may return. What think you, Bailey?"

"We'll all make ourselves scarce afore daylight. I don't think it anyways likely that Butler himself will be back for peveral days. He is in a hurry to get to Cherry Valley Howsamever, maybe one or two of his Injins may be looking around here."

By this time, the scout, through the medium of sounds and a few whispered words, had made Captain Heath understand that Honyost Schuyler was concealed within the chimney, and that it was their purpose to subject him to a little whole-some fright. The officer at once took the initiative.

"Is pose," said he, "you noticed Honyost Schuyler, with Captain Butler?"

Mr. Gardaer and Back Bailey both answered yes.

"Well, I only wish I wild lay hands upon him. He ought to be burned alive, or subjected to slow death! He has always been treated as a favorite servant at the house of Mr. Gardner, and now, as payment for kindness, he turns against his old employer in his hour of need. Ugh! the villain! I propose, Back, that we make a vow to burn that fellow alive!" What do you say?"

"Wal, I don't know as he is worse than others with him. I wouldn't care much if he was shot, but then, Captain, what's the use of any onnecessary cruckty?"

"Such a man as he deserves no mercy. The only quarter we ought to give him, is four quarters! Oh! if I could lay hands upon him this minute, how I would punish him!"

"B t, Captain Heath," said Edith, with a feigned seriousness, "y a seem to have an especial spate against Honyost. It is true he has shown no gratitude, but let us be merciful to him, as we all hope the One above to be merciful to us."

"Don't talk to me of mercy, when such a villain as he is quiken of," returned the officer, with a tragic air. "I may hell it when Butler or one of his Iroquois ask it, but let no one altempt to excuse that Honyost Schuyler."

Don't be so savage, Captain," said the scout, courling continually to restrain his mirth; "for, as Batler has gone away, you can't expect to see Ho yout for some time yet."

"I am not so sure of that. Catioot followed Batter's party but he aw nothing of him in it. I shouldn't wonder now if he is somewhere in the building. Let's search for him!"

"We have hardly the time to spare," said Mr. Gardner "If he is her, let the poor wretch be, while we attend to our own safety."

"Well, I don't suppose he is really worth the trouble. But I am of the opinion that we run no risk by remaining in the building over night. I propose that we do it. I will start a fire in the fire-place!"

An audible groan issued from the latter place, as these words were uttered. All did their utmost to restrain their laughter, while the jovial scout seemed in danger of aparters from the efforts he made to keep from shouting.

"What do you say?" pursued Captain Heath. "Shall we have a fire or not?"

"No, no," it is not cold enough to make it uncomfortable without one," replied Edith.

"I am decidedly in favor of it. What kind of a fire-place have you? Let me look at it, to see if it is all right."

Buck interposed:

"I'll tend to matters, Captain. Yen may entertain Miss Edith."

The Captain seemingly obeyed, while the scout peered in behind the board. It was too dark for him to see Honyest. "You skelter up the claimbly, or he'll nab you!" and then restored the board to its place. Immediately after, all heard a furious scrambling, and the falling of mortar and stones in the fire-place, caused by the desperate efforts of the frightened fellow.

"What is that?" demanded Captain Heath.

"You know the house is full of rats," answered the scont; but I don't suppose there's any need, of being frichtened about 'em."

"It would take a pretty big rat to make all that claster 1 must see what it is."

All objected, but he was not to be denied, and, seizing the light, he drew back the fire board and looked up the chimney.

"Hallo! what's this?" and catching hold of a look, he commenced tugging with all his strength, Honyost Schuyler esisted, but finally came sprawling down in the freepisce, and was drawn out upon the floor,

"Oh, good Mr. Heath! I am so glad to see you! Den't hurt me, please! I'll do any thing in the world for you Please don't harm me! please don't! I'll fight for you we long as I live?"

As a matter of course, Captain Heath was furious, but the extreaties of his friends at length prevailed, and he consented to forego the bliss of vengeance for the present. As soon as Honyest realized that his life was not in imminent danger, he raised the window, sprang out before he could be prevented, and made off in the darkness as fast as his legs could carry him.

For some minutes after this unceremonious departure, the convenient to their mirth. The scout seemed on the could of going into spasms from excessive emotion, while even Elith could not forbear laughing. Gradually, however, with a sense of their situation, this feeling ceased, and they talked together seriously of the proper course to pursue. All were in favor of leaving the house immediately, but Mr. Gardher was so exhausted and worn down by fatigue and the scenes he had passed through, that Captain Heath was basic-ward in proposing it.

"The bodies too of the widow and her son must have a burill," said he, "and it will not be night to leave your coachman above ground."

"What! Is Robert dead too?" asked the old man, in horrified amazement. "And did they kill him?"

"He lies but a short distance from the house, where he

"My God! and they only spared us! I can not under-

"It was not through any mercy that he felt toward us," replied Blith. "He feared the consequences of going that far, I think."

"He will have enough of consequences, as it is."

A in that unaccountable drollery that will sometimes for at the most serious moments, came upon the taughter, as she said:

"Wist a son-in law, he would make for you, father!"

"Hith, if you do not with to offend me, never mention his name in that manner again."

you louthe him as much as I do, but you must believe there was once a probability of such a thing."

Captain Heath was an amused listener to the badinage of Edith, but he was too polite to intrude any observation of his own at such a time. When the conversation was ended, he said.

"If Mr Gardner is too fatigated to bear much walking at present, we will remain here until morning."

"I do feel jeled, but, if my daughter or myself is endangened by remaining here, let us not stay another moment."

"It seems to me that there is no likelihood of either Butler or any of his Indians returning, unless Honyost Schuyler should come up with them, and let him know what has occurred—and it does not seem at all probable that the frightened fellow will see any thing of them before daylight. What think you, Buck?"

"There's no telling the twistings and conflutements of an Injin's brain, and the whole party may get it into their heads to take the back-track, and be on their way to the house this z-inute. Howsumever," he added, as he noticed the effect of nis words, "I don't think it at all likely they'll do any such Bring as that, and I ain't afeard but what I'll sleep's and. Ha! ha! I think I'll take the fire-place for my bed."

"In case we leave, whither will you go?" asked Elith.

"To your uncle's, of course. You know we are but a few miles from his house."

"If there be any one who understands In lines and their ways, it ought to be an Indian himself, so I will call up Catfoot and consult him."

The Oneida was accordingly invited to ascend, and he immediately joined the council.

"Cathoot," said Captain Heath, "we are consulting as to what is the best course for us to pursue. The only really safe plan we know would be for us to leave this building at once, but Mr. Gardner, here, feels that it would be a severa task for him to attempt a journey to-night."

The speaker paused for the Oneida to speak, but he did not move his lips. It was not until he was directly appealed to, that he made his reply.

"Do you think any of the Indians will return to-night?"

"No come back to-night-stay away-go to Sherry Valley."

"When they hear of our being here, will they not make haste to get here again?"

"No here till to-morrow-know den too late- won't stop-go on to Sherry Valley."

"We might as well, then, remain where we are."

The Onei'n similed by a downward jerk of his head, that he was of the opinion that they need have no fears of remaining in the bill of through the night.

"Chr. kep wach hear Injin if he come-take scale I'le to The goales," be all'el, in an exaliant tone.

The common of the friendly Indian decided the matter. The common is dead read parts of the building, and, with the except a of Captain Heath, they were soon unconscious in slander. The events of the day and night had so wrought upon the nerves, that he found it impossible to sleep. He common is the same aparament with Baley, who, headless of his the publishing to an late, sleept soundly.

In this it useless to attempt to get any rest, the officer at what a some led to where the Oneida had taken his position to the ulight. To his surprise, he was gone. He made the policy of the his call, proving that he was not in the building to he watch for over an hour, and was beginning to be to by trouble hat his absence, when the door was softly not thank a dust the dark sky behind, he saw the interpretable. The toom being perfectly dark, the savage was a first of his presence until he spoke.

"What has kept you away so long?"

fact tone.

" When is it? Has there been any one prowling around?"

"I had come back—Carf of take his scalp."

" It is my all about it," said the officer, considerably excited for the safety of those above.

"Contact by here—bime-by hear noise—some one crawlin' of the the Thereway. Cyle! Ongle! no Thagway in the Charles of the Oneila, with a guttural laugh. "Bimo-ly color the Cathot speak. Mohawk knowed 'want in 1922 and cak—run tast—Cathot step out door, catch him, off his scalp."

" Was there but one?"

" Dat all."

[&]quot; Was he one of the Mohawks who was here to-day?"

" Yah -here wid Butler-come back agin zloue"

"What made him do that?"

"Bal lijin—want to get sealp of old man and gri-ght Thugwan to help him—bal lijin—won't take woman's scalp no more."

Captain Heath understood, from what the Obelia half mill that one of the Maharks half studdinly litt the purpose of mardening that two prisoners who remained there, well knowing that the merotiess Cayuga would not refuse to join him in the evil war. Instead of meeting Thugwan, he met his own well merall doom.

As soon as it was fairly light, the latinites of the house were astir. After breaktast, the solerand day of burying the dead was discharged. The widow and son were brought bown tenderly from the room where they hay side by side, could and stiff; the conclumen was laid by them, and in a broad and deep grave they were deposited, and covered over with their mother math. Within a short astance of them by the body of him who had caused and this woe. But he had his desky brother were allowed to remain where they were, to corrupt their the monday and, a warning of the retribution that is some, to evertake the transposor sooner or later.

The sun was just above the hills when the little company took their departure from the place that had been the scene of so in the excitement and distress. The Obelia acted as their galde, or more properly as their scout. Their progress was regulated to the end mance of Mr. Gardner. After a several boar's walk, relieved by occasional passess for rest, they mached the residence of his brother.

provided that lather and daughter were as seeme as it was provide for them to be, the three bade them a temporary tare well, and hastened away to take their part in more important areas that were three'y beginning to occur.

CHAPTER XII.

BAGGING THE BRUTE.

Crackamations, when Honyost Schuyler gave him as account of what had occurred at the farm-house. Especially when he learned that Captain Heath and Buck Boiley wer to a calcelled in the building during the entire day that he ard his Indians occupied it; that Thugwan had, in all probability, been slain, and that, beyond a doubt, his prisoners were now saddy beyond his reach—with he learned this, and smalled more, his rage was terrible. Despite the positive injurious of his superior officers, he at first determined to return with all haste and make the attempt to recover them, that as his excitement moderated, his usual shrewdness and that, are alternative but to submit for the present.

When the Tory arrived in Cherry Valley, he commenced at eace to spread the proclamation of his brother, Colonel B. i.e. The more effectually to accomplish his ends, he issued to see to his adherents of a meeting, at which he agreed to have give them upon the all exciting topic of the day. These to has were widely spread, and succeeded in attracting constitutions were widely spread, and succeeded in attracting constitution mumbers at the appointed time.

If my st Scauyler stool by the clow of Batler, and perferned the office of anticipator, so acceptable at all times to a mile specker. He looked in the face of the auditors, and, if it detected the premonitions of a smale, he instantly spranget to the air, cloped his hands, and bust into his boistereds that for the face! hac!" which always proved intections. Whe her it was his ladicrous figure and manner, or whether the creating of imagner, that so often threw the ardience into contribute of imagner, is a matter that cannot be settled by us maker, who was widely known as one of the rankest kind of Tories. His feelings against the rebels were as bitter as those of Batter himself, while all of the auditors seemed equally intense in their hatred. Secare in the dwelling, they certainly anticipated no drawback to their loyal enthusiasm.

By some means, notice of this meeting came to the knowledge of the officer commanding at For: Dayton, but a short distance away. He at once dispatched a detachment of troops to break it up. Butler was in the midst of his herangue, when the door was burst open, and an officer aunounced that they were all prisoners. The sight of bristling beyonets upon the outside, emphasized this announcement, and all surrendered at discretion.

The entire number were marched away to Fort Dayton, where they were placed in the hands of General Benedict Arnold, who, with General Larned, commanded the patriot forces that had marched to the relief of Fort Schryler. When Butler learned that he was at the mercy of this iron-sorded officer, his heart misgave him; he knew he had little claims for mercy. General Arnold already had inspired the Tories with a wholesome dread of his justice.

Most of those captured were imprisoned, but the leaders of the meeting were tried before a court-martial convened for the purpose; they were accused of being within the American lines as spies. Every one was convicted and sentenced to be hung. Among them were included, of course, Captain Butler and Honyost Schuyler.

When it became known through the American army that the famous Tory had been condemned to death, it created a sensation. There were several officers who had formerly been intimate associates of Butler, and who commiserated the unfortunate situation in which he had placed himself. These friends visited General Arnold in a body, and petitioned him to revoke his sentence of capital punishment, and to hold him as a prisoner during the war.

At first the General refused to listen, but their representation finally succeeded, and he granted a reprieve. The Tory was sent as a prisoner to Albany, where, after being imprisoned several months, he feigned sickness, and was removed to the house of a Tory friend. Here he effected his escape, and, by the aid of a fleet horse, reached Niagara.

CHAPTER XIII.

HONTOST IN A NEW CHARACTER.

Ar Little Falls lived the mother of Honyost Schayler, and Mirjolas his brother. When these two heard that Honyost are condemned to death, they were filled with distress. The archer's grief especially was most poignant, but, mother-like, she resolved to visit General Arnold and intercede in her son's behalf.

General Arnold was seated alone within his tent, ordered in examining papers, and plans that had been dated for assisting the behaviored fat. All these but confirmed an unwelcome trath. Colonel Ganseyport was shall up in Fort Schuyler; General St. Leger with a large army, including has break of Tories and Indianahad completely invested it, while Arnold had been sent to attack and dispurse the British army, with a force that could have been swallowed up by a detachment from the enemy's divisions.

How, therefore, he could perform the work entrusted to him was a question fall of grave doubts. Inspiring his army with his own flery impetuosity, he could make an assault upon the British that might effect a temp may relief; but he well knew that when the insignificant face under him however as known to St. Leger, as it care along the belown, in care of such a demonstration, he would in turn be attacked and dispersed.

In this reverse, he was interrupted by the minor moment that a large was waiting to see him. He give with set of the total total and the large land, with hair partly may, and a fee upon which were traces of deep griet that had herly to me upon her, enter h. She was and had placing, and her are a so sed that she was enhanced her through.

"Will you take a seat, mailim?" will General Armill, rising and offering her one. She accepted it.

"Will you state what I can do for you, malam," he

The woman moved her isos to speak, and then burst into a violent fit of weeping. The General was thus given a premonition of what was coming. He telt a strong antipathy to hear her further; but, he did not allow his countenance or manner to show that he experienced any such emotion. He calmly waited until the sorrow-stricken woman ejeculated amid her sobs.

"My son-my son-my son!"

"What is his name?"

"Honyost Schuyler-my poor child that is condemned to death !"

"What I expected!" muttered Arrell to himself. He said nothing further until the mother had recovered somewhat her equanimity, and then he a ldre-sed ber-

"Mrs. Schuyler, I trust you are a sensible woman, and I shall therefore speak to you on the supposition that you are such. It is not often in a case like this, especially when my mind is so pre-occupied as it now is, that I consent to hold conversation and explain my actions to a perioner. But, I will do so with you. In the first place, are you wave of the circumstances under which Honyost Schuyler, your ran, was taken?"

any thing at all that could harm a person in the world," replied the mother, the tears streaming down her alreeks.

"He has been very active in fighting against the land that gave him birth, and that has treated him as its own son. He has done much harm-"

" But haven't others done the same?"

row, my good woman, that it was done in anether way. Had he remained outsite of our lines, and been captured, or had it occurred during battle, he would be held as a simple prisoner of war. But, Mrs. Schuyler, please understard what I am now about to say. There is a law in war, which if broken, can only be punished with dath. If a solder is caught acting as a spy, he must be killed by those who take him. The British serve our men in that manner, and we do the same with theirs. Hangest Schuyler has been taken, tried, and condemned as a spy, and now can you tell me very he should not suffer the death of a spy?"

Foolish General Arnold! He had attempted to weigh in the balance the reason of a worm in a class her affection, not knowing that it was impossible for them to poise for an instant. Her reply was a fit of weeping and the per inent inquiry:

"Captain Butter is not going to be hing and he was doing True than my poor half-witted sen."

General Arnoll arose to his test. He was perplexed and ired of the interview. He saw he could accomplish nothing of altempting to rea on with the wearen before him. Her whole soul was absorbed in the one idea of procuring a represe for her conformed child, and her mind could take in nothing else for the time.

"Madam," said he, " it is useless to continue this conversation any longer. Four son must die, that he assured. My time is precious, and I cannot wait any more."

The mother was down on her knees, with her hands clasped, her face upturned and streaming with tears.

"O spare my child! spare him, and he shall serve you as long as he lives! I and my other son, Nicholas, will toil for you as long as we have the breath of life. Remember that he has not the sense of those who have led into this wrong renember that he would have dene different, had he known more. O remember this, and be met it duto him, as I pray God may be merciful to you when you plead for it. Be forgiven; and you shall never be serry that you was merciful to poor, half-witted Honyout Schuyler!"

Above all things, General Arnell hated scenes; and his present position therefore was most embarrassing. He had given over the idea of attempting to silence her by argument, or of inducing her to leave of her own accord, before her brayer was answered. He was about to call in one of his and to remove her, when a cilca strack him.

"Mess Securities, I will give your som a chance to save his life. It he will go into the British lines as a spy for me, perform a task that I shall give him, and return again, his life shall be spared."

It seemed that the mother would go mad with joy! She would have embraced the knees of General Arnold had he not prevented. For a few moments she was wild in her demonstrations.

"He will do it! he will do it! there is nothing that he will refuse to do for General Arnold! He will die for Lim!"

"Calm yourself, my good woman, and let us converse sensibly about it. In the first place, you see, I must trust a great deal to the honesty of Honyost."

" (). ! he will be honest! You need not fear him, whet what you have done for him."

head, after getting into the British lines, and safely out or my treach, to betrien I them instead of us? See, what harm he could inflict upon us."

"Oh! never, werer think of that! He would not do such a thing for the world."

"Probably not," replied Arnold; "but, I must require some surety at your bands that he shall faithfully perform the duty that I entrust to him."

Put me in his place—put me in his place—slay me if he does not do every single thing you wish him to do!" exclaimed the mother, with impetuous anxiety.

"We never execute death upon women," answered Arnold;

"but, you speak of another son of yours."

"Yes: Nicholas, I left him at home, at the Little Falls. He will take II myost's place, and you may hang him if Honyost discheys you in a single word."

"That will answer. You may now depart, and, as soon as your son reaches here, we will make the arrangements. Undersmal, that in case of treachery upon the part of Honyout, his brother Nicholus shall die, just as sure as I live!"

The mother was too overjoyed to have her heart impressed by any additional words that General Arnold might say. She insisted on hissing his hand, and then took her departure to her quiet home at Little Falls, to bring back to him the required hostage.

General Arnold stood a moment in deep thought. The idea that had come to him during his conversation with Mrs. Schuyler was one fraught with momentous consequence, not only to his own army, and beleagued Fort Schuyler, but to the cause itself. He saw how, if successful, it would dispersative soldiers, Tories and Indians under St. Leger, and revive the drooping hearts of the patriots through the Mohawk Valley and Central New York; how it would send cheer to the anxious heart of Washington, and herve the Continental army to greater deeds and to greater privations in the performance of the holy duty they had taken upon themselves!

He saw, too, that if the plan failed, it would be no common faither, but one that was discrease and disherening. There meant the capture of Fort Schuyler, the equive of factor is of his own army, and the incommation of a reign of thoot and terror through the Moicask Valley. That he still section would be fail open to the Torics and Indians.

But the during soul of Bene liet Arnold did not be incertained this risk. The cause in which he was exactly appropried such desperate ventures, and he was the back and homen to carry them through. Having fully matured the plan in his own mind, he sent for Honyost Schuyler.

"Honyost Schuyler," sail the General, "you know that you have been tried as a spy and toun i guilty."

The man gazed into the face of the officer with a blank, stolid lock, as if Levillant comprehend the question.

"It is true, you have been condemned to death, but, I am going to offer you a chance of life. Your mother has been here and implored that I should spare you. I concat to do so upon one condition, and that is, that you perform a certain duty for me. Will you do it?"

"Haw! haw! haw! will I do it! I recken I'll do any thing you've a mind to ax me. What is it now? Do you want me to stand upon my heal for a couple of hours, to get into the British army and bring St. Lever in upon my back?

The poor follow was uprogress in his manifestations of toy. Arnold ordered him to be seried, but for a time, it was impossible to make him obey. He taked a phroatte around the room, give vent to a half dozen ward ops, kicked over a chair, and cracked his heels tegether, and then assauling a zeri us air, and muced himself racky

"In the first place," said the General, "you must understand that your life is not yet seemed to you. It depends entirely upon your own lation. I wish you to enter St. Leger's army as a spy for me. If you do that, and come safely back to me, I will spare your life. Are you willing to andertake such a task?"

"Undertake it! Don't ask me any thing, only commend me—yes, command me, and I will do it! how! how!!

The sly expression of Honyost Schuyler at the announcement of this duty did not escape the keen eye of General Arnold.

"I wish you to make your way to St. Leter's camp, saste hat our army is double the size of his, that they are aloudably supplied with artillery, and that we are marching to attack him at once. During your absence," all I the General in his impressive and deliberate tones, "your brother Nicholas will remain in our hands as a ho tage. In case the British army attack us, I shall take it for granted that you have played as false, and shall have him hand at once. You understand the conditions, I suppose."

"Yes," replied Honyost, with a sations face. "I understand 'em and think they're all right."

"It matters little to me what you think of it. You can take your choice of the conditions—either to hang, or play the apy, as you have so often done against us"

"Haw! haw! haw?" roared the more tild creature: "won't I make St. Leger slake in his boots." I tell you, I'll te the means of scattering the red coats and red skins with all their great guns and hosses."

"We will arrange it so that several deserters shall follow you. Cathot is in camp and others as good, who will join."

" How soon do you want me to start?"

"Just as soon as your brother is safe in our hands."

The siege of Fort Schuyler continued. Colonel Gensevout, and his brave gerrison held out, while complet by invested by the large army of St. Leger. Beyond the latter, were Generals Amold, Larned and their forces, too feeble to assail their enemies, who were sandwiched as it were, between the fort and themselves.

In this state affairs had remained for a considerable time, when the ruse of the American General, at which we already bave hinted, was attempted—a ruse, to result in complete success or in total disaster.

some hours after the interview with Arnold, Honyost

Schuyler, and Catfoot, the Oneilla, stood alone in the woods, a short distance from the British army. The clothes of the former seemed in a sall plight, being torn and shot through in several places, while the Indian was so thoroughly disguised by his paint and war dress, that it is doubtful whether his old enemy, Thugwan, would have recognized him, had he been living. They had halted to converse awhile.

"Haw! haw! haw!" laughed Honyost. "You must put it to 'em steep, Catfoot."

"You tell big lie."

"I expect to tell 'em such yarns, that I'll be 'stonished to hear 'em. I'm a purty hard case, I know; but there's one thing I would never do—and that is, lie."

"Talk too much," interrupted the savere, impatiently.

I expect to tell some whoppers now, and to do it in a good cause—that is, the cause of Honyost Schuyler. Let's see: I b'leve the idea is for us to go into their camp from different directions, ain't it?"

"Yeh, dat what do."

"Wall, all that remains for us is to get in there as quick as possible, and to go to manufacturing our yarns at once."

"We go now," said the Oneida.

The two separated. It was so arranged that Honyost was to go directly into the British camp, while Cathot, by taking a circultous route, was to come upon it for a different direction. In case of meeting, these two was a light entire agnorance of each other—it being satisfy, however, beforehand, that their stores should a rose in the main particulars.

After walking some distance, Honyost began to run at the open of his speed. When he i ached the pickets, he was a long and exhausted only for a time, unable to give an ing and of himself. He was so well known in the British a may, that several new raized him at once. He gave an account of the capane c. Capt in Bacer and himself, and of his own nurses escape. He stored that he was condemned to death, and was being led to the gand vs, when, through the carelessness of the gand, he was embled to break away from them. He added, that General Arnold was morening with six thousand men to attack the English forces.

This story spread like wild-fire through the camp. It had just fairly permeated it, and had its effect, when Catfoot and several Oncida Indians (whom he had encountered on the way) came in from an opposite direction, with substantially the same account. Shortly after, Buck Bailey, so completely disguised, that he passed within a foot of Catfoot, without his identity being discovered by that wily savage, came into the iner as a deserter. His story, if possible, was more frightful than any of his predecessors. He was certain the entire army e would be killed or be made prisoners before sunset.

Such was the panic created by these startling asseverations, that St. Leger convened a council of war at once.

It will be recollected that a considerable portion of the British army, under Colonel St. Leger and Sir John Johnson, was composed of Indians. These were mostly drawn from the Six Nations, and were under the direct command of the half-breed, Brandt. Most of them had participated in the battle of Oriskany, where they had suffered severely. In addition to this, they had been disappointed in the present siege. Their leaders had promised that the Yankee first should be taken at the end of a few days at the most, and that it should be turned over to their hands at once for bloodsplied and massacre.

Instead of matters terminating thus, the fort had held out for weeks, and seemed no nearer capitulation than at first. Many of the most renowned warriors of the Indians had been picked off by the American sharpshooters, and the remainder were in that morbid state of mind, when, but the sillitest breath was cause for them to take their depart re-came among them, may well be imagined. Their discount of the charged to its documentation, Brandt, himself, making common cause with them and arging them to depart. Such was the start of all its, when St. Leger called his contail of war.

listen of to his sorty. The account of his capture and escape, the coefficient living for. They wished to know the name ber of the America's. "Like the leaves of the trees—thouser is the replied, the fellow carrying out to the letter his premise to General Araold.

Catfoot was next placed upon the stand. His short, sententious replies, evidently impressed his listeners as truth testif; and, inasmuch as they agreed with the statements of Henyost, the council considered that his narration, was true.

The deserter's testimony only corroborated what the others had said. Little did those British officers imagine that deserter to be the renowned Buck Bailey, the scout of Cherry Valley, who poured his plausible stories in their ears.

The council of war was stormy. The officers were excited and heedless of their words. When discussion was running high, word came to St. Leger that Brandt and his Indian allies were preparing to leave. He immediately hastened out to prevent it.

He made his appearance before the Indians, upon the very eve of their departure. The first proceeding was to command them to return to their duty. Every officer who has had command of American Indians, from Brandt, down to Albert Pike, need not be told how lightly they regard army discipline. The order of St. Leger was received with secwling brows, which showed that officer plainly enough that not one of them intended to respect his command. He expostulated with Brandt, himself, against such desertion; but the Indian blood of the balf-breed was up, and remonstrance but increased his costinacy. From expostulations, St. Leger naturally glided into entreaties, both to the savages and to their keyler. This proved as useless as or lers—the Indians continuing their preparations before his eyes.

Irritated beyond measure, St. Leger strole back to the tent where the council of war was still in session, and said:

"Brandt and the Inlians are all going. If General Arnoll's forces were not half the number they are reported to be, it would hardly be safe now to risk an encounter.

"Why are the savages leaving us?" inquired Johnson.

"Because they believe the Americans are coming down upon them in numbers sufficient to devour them. The infernal rumors are playing the mischief with us."

"It is strange," continued Johnson, in meaning tones, "that the American army should be so close to us for so long a Line, without our being able to learn its real strength."

St. Leger understood this remark to be a reference to his neglect in not obtaining such information. Prominent as was the position held by Sir John Johnson, the General was in no mood to receive any such criticisms from him.

Affairs among us, we have not been able to induce a single nember of the Iroquois to bring us the intelligence."

"I was not aware," replied Sir John Johnson, in considerable heat, "that it was considered the duty of a subor traits to take upon himself the management of an army in the presence of his superior, unless the latter particularly requested him so to do."

"Nor was I aware before this, that it was the daty of a subor limite officer to criticise the action of his commander It seems, however, that a new era in the management of anditary affairs is about to be introduced."

"When the incupability of a leader is evident to every lieutenant, some means should be taken to prevent his bringing disaster upon the army under him."

"What a pity, Colonel Johnson, we had not araile! our.

ceives of your ability in the conduct of this campaign."

"I could not have failed more signally than you have done," replied the baronet, growing more angry each moment.

"In this state of affairs, will you please inform me what part you have taken to prevent its occurrence?"

Leger, can say. If you had shown any ability at all, we should not have been compelled to rely upon these statements that have just come to us; nor would they have caused to a panic among the Indians."

"When I consider it necessary to come to you for advice I shall do so; until then, Sir John Johnson, Superinten is at I had an Affairs, you will please keep your advice to your telf. I want none of it."

" Whether you do or not-"

Cathort and another Onelda, in tones that were hear labeled and clear by the council of war. Honyost Schayler, Back Balley and a hundred different throats instantly caught up the startling cry, until it echoed from end to end of the army.

A scene of the williest pools instearly followed. St. Leger and Sir John Johnson constitute at once. Ceasing their after-cation, each spring to have, and led their troops in their discretely flight. Within a half hear of the atterance of the cry by Cation and his dusky brother, the critics army, officers, privates and Indians, were pouring turnalmously away from Port Schryber, as it possed by death itself.

So complete was the halterous period created by one or two startusts, that the tents remained standard, the complequipage, provisions, are there and ammunition, all were left behind, hundreds of the men throwing away their arms as they fled, and relieving themselves of every incombined.

Disappointed and exesperate?, the indices insulted their companions in flight, and finally went to torsul awking them, for the sake of the plan ler upon their persons. Scores were thus stricken down by the hands of those who had been counted as their addies. "A just retribution this for employing these heathen saveges in a war upon the people of the frontier settlements." When crossing Wood Crock, so great was the panic that numbers were drowned.

At or crossing the stream, the voice of Honyost Scheyler grainally conselland his windo attention seemed described in attention to his own personal sately. In springing over a fillen tree, he cought his foot and tell. In term of name limitely rising he by as if senseless. Those around were too nach occupied thatten ling to their own safety, to atten by him.

He avoid lev until certain there were none who could see it in; then he captiously rose to his feet. Listening a too then the spring back near the tree, then took the "back track" at the too of his speed. He was long-winded, then of foot, and ran a considerable distance before holding

Making his way to Fort Scampler, he give that common the incredition his first information of the panie and flight of the besimple army, and of the near approach of General Armelia Colonel Gensevoort instantly marched out in parsoit of St. Leger. He cauture humbers of prisoners and all the property that we have stated tray left behind. The retreat of the British army could not have been more disastrous and disgraceful, the success of the American could not have been more fruitful and inspiring

CHAPTER XV.

CAPTAIN HEATH CONQUERED

On the evening succeeding the flight and pursuit of size leger's army, Edith Gardner was standing at one of the size down of her uncle's house, gazing down the road over which she and her father had passed a few weeks before. See had stood thus for a half hour, her mind absorbed in reverie.

A few feet behind her sat her father and uncle, twin best thers, so much alike that it would have prizzled any eyes but those of affection to identify them. They were both smoking, and occasionally exchanging words in that absent, listless manner which only makes the indulgence of the pipe the more soothing.

Elith heeded not their words. Just then she was worder ing where Captain Eugene Heath could be. She had heard nothing of him, since his departure, exc q t a f w days previous, when Buck Bailey helted at the door and told her that he had succeeded in getting into Fort Schnyler, and that shortly there would be severe fighting.

The panic-stricken and demoralized army had passed within a few miles of the spot where the girl was standing; and the avenging soldiers under Colonel Gansevoort were, during the hardest fighting, in the same neighborhood. Several times through the day, the faint report of guns in the distance reached the ears of Edith, but, it never once struck her that they could have been caused by a flying and purs ting atmy.

Edith was still heedless of what was passing around her, From her position, she could distinguish objects for some distance down the road.

Suddenly her eye was arrested by a moving figure, and at once concentrating her gaze she distinguished the oneline of a man, who was rapidly approaching. Her heart the bled violently at a suspicion that it might be the very person who had occupied her thoughts; but a moment later, she saw that it was an Indian Misgiving now took possession of her, but she was quickly reassured by recognizing Cathoot, the Oneida, as he came in front of the house. Suspecting that he was upon some errand, she asked:

- "Is any thing the matter, Catfoot, with our friends? Come in the house," she a kiel, as he halted outsile. The savage shook his head.
 - " In hig harry-Catfoot no got time."
 - 'Dil you wish to see me, or my father?"
 - "Want to see gal-see you-sumthin' to speak."
 - "Well, let us have it," said Elith, with impatience.
 - "Cap'n Heath down the roal-comin."
 - "I am glad to hear it. My friends are always welcome."
 - "Ain't well-Cap'n be sick."
 - " Ah! how is that? Is he dangerously so?"
- "Duns o-two bullet hit Cap'n Heath-two Mohawk shoot him-Cathot get dere scalps," a bled the Oneila, with a grim smile, I whire down to the trophies that hung at his girdle.

Eith now comprehented that Captain Heath was bully wour led, and that the savage had been sent forward to prepare them for his arrival. She harried within the house to make ready for the unfortunate officer.

"Wounded, is he? poor fellow!" excluded Mr. Gardner, bustling around in his usual way, without accomplishing any thing. "I'm sorry for him, if he is a robel! Good fellow, though, firell that! Daughter, we must act the part of the good Sam critan to him—take him in—take care of him. If the Lord be willing, we'll make him well soon as we can—you know, so that he can go to work and fight the rest of his battles, had had ha!"

"You know I have studied medicine, dear, though I've ben a tell practice ever since you were born. Howsumever, I'll be able to get my band in again, had had.

Eddle returned the kiss of her father, and then took her station at the window, to watch for the appearance of her friend. She had not long to wait. In a few moments she again ca ght the figure of Cattoot, this time upon a horse. Directly behind him four men bore a litter, and who it was that lay upon it, her own rapidly-beating heart told. She and her father and uncle passed outside the gate to receive it.

A: Captain Heath saw them, he rose to a sittle position and greeted them with a smile.

"A ma plight in which to make not are or "sail is, with a haigh. "I am ashemed that it is that "Hang it, lie down again!" commanded Mr. Garler; "ital cour physician, and you must obey me. White excels y physician, and you must obey me. White excels y phose steps—right up stairs—into the first does you see that!

to your right—right on the bed—put bim down per y

These commands were issued during the laboral process. If the party up stairs, the last exchanging body at the moment that Captain Heath was laid open the new This lone, Mr. Gardner ordered every one from the room, will ne examined the wounds of his patient. He had that a bullet had passed through the shoulder, and one through the side. Both were severe—the first having broken a bose, and the second having torn up the first bully.

"You are cut up considerably," said Mr. Grieer, "and it will take several months to bring you all right. Du there's no danger of you, only keep quiet—if you only keep quiet."

Under the skilfal management of Mr. Godiner, with careful nursing of his daughter, Captain Hoda soon was very comfortable. Upon the day succeeding his array, his companions took their departure, so that he was lett now with the two old gentleman and Edith.

At intervals of a few weeks, Back Bailer and Coffet prised at the house to learn the stage of converse or which their friend had reached. The scout, several that the more mained over night, and reconnict to the house of the age velous success of the ruse of Honyost Schaper. The idea of the siege of an invested fort being raised, and a later army exattered, by the doings of a half witted person, warred the two old men greatly.

It was hardly to be believed that these two highly seems a layalists were already converts to the rebelic asset but it was self-evident that the views and projudices of Mr. Gardeer had been sensibly affected during the past town across. Captain Heath congratulated himself that the old men were gravitateing toward the patriot cause more rapidly than each lines been expected.

As soon as affairs became more settled through the Mohawk Valley, it had been the intention of Mr. Gardner to return to his residence in Cherry Valley. His horses had been recovered, and the coach repaired, so that he was provided with the means whenever he possessed the inclination.

The condition of Captain Heath's wound deferred the proposed journey until the summer had passed, and Autumn was then. It was fixed that they should return in November. Forember, the officer being confident that by that time he would be very nearly, if not quite, recovered.

An! those days of sickness, and of the gentle administration of Edith Gardner! Our pen cannot paint their calm enjoyment! Who of our poor soldiers, when lying weak and helpess in the hospital, has not looked upon the nurse attending Lim as a very angel from heaven? What though the face was plain and homely, was there not a divine beauty that h'uminated it as she spoke soft and cheering words to you? Did not the kind, pitying light of those eyes call back to your remembrance your own sainted mother, beside whose knee you had lowed in infancy? As those cool hands were placed upon your fevered brow, or as the fingers ran rapidly over the sheet, to bear your words to your distant home, or were as faithful as the time-piece itself to administer the draught, what won ler that your simple nature exalted humanity to divinity?

Suppose that, to the conditions specified above, we add the one that, the watcher beside your bed should be she who has long possessed the purest affection of your heart; who in your estimation has sat upon the pinnacle which can hold no other long on earth; suppose, we say, that this was the being, with an you loved above all others, what is to be expected?

What is certain to occur?

Why, that your love is sanctified of every dross. For the constitute in your life you gain a true idea of her value, and an appreciable sense of your own selfish nature, that never belong vested her with such heavenly attributes. And, after the dreak the crisis of your fever, you lie weak and told as bookly, but with all your natural mental strength, and spend hour after hour in the long, sultry afternoons in gazing into the sweet, subdued free, does it not happen that you speculate seriously with yourself, and wonder how it is that she is treading earth, and not using her wings to fly to Heaven?

Such, at all events, was the experience of Captain Eugene Heath. It was on one of those warm, still attentions in August that he lay looking in the face of Edith, who, just then was occupied in reading, in just such a mood as we have described. The two old men were indulging themselves in their afternoon nap, the voices of the servants sounded faint and distant below stairs, and in the holeysuckle that clandered over and around the window, was heard that musically model to look buzz and hum of the bees that were boring into their depths. Monotonous, yet soothing and sweet, were these sounds. Presently Edith laid aside her book.

"Edith," said Captain Heath, "do you never grow weary of sitting hour after hour in this room?"

She looked smilingly upon him a moment, and then shook her head without speaking.

"How great a sacrifice it must be to you?"

"It should be a sacrifice to no one. During the past few weeks, I have come to the belief that the sick room is a means of discipline through which we should all pass before entering upon the real duties of life. No one can spend a week by the bedsile of a sufferer without being made stronger and better."

"You feel 'stronger' and 'better,' do you?" asked the patient, smiling in turn.

"A hundred times more patient at heart."

"I never imagined that you could become any more patient or any better," a ided Captain Heath, still smiling, as he raised himself upon his elbow, and gized fondly upon her. "It may have been because you were already lifted so far above my sinful self."

do me a greater wrong if you continue to think so. I would pot recall the past five or six weeks for the world."

" Nor would I," said Captain Heath, with visible emerical

"Indeed, I am glad if it has benefited you morally, although it has not in any other manner. You have, then, learned your lesson, have you?"

"I have," replied the officer, looking straight in her face,
"I have learned the true value of a woman such as you are.
Your patient, self-denying spirit--your never-tiring kindness, rour devotion, have exalted you, Edith, higher than any romantic facey ever could have placed you—"

"I am afail there is something of your fever still lurking a your lead," interrupted Elith, with a smile, blushing at he same time, at the fervent compliments which were poured to her ear.

"Ah me!" sighed Captain Heath, with a tragic resignation to sank back upon his pillow, "I am afrail the fever isn't ro bling my brain."

" What then?" The inquiry was almost unconsciously ut-

tere l

"It nust be my heart," he replied, with a sly expression, as he turned his head toward her.

"Fever of the heart!" exclaimed Edith, pretending to take the literal meaning of the words. "I shall have to call tather. That is a new turn of your affliction."

"I beg you will not call him. He can do nothing, I assere you, for this complaint. It is entirely beyond his skill—"

"But it must be attended to-"

"I ist what I am thinking. You, E lith, are the only physician that can assist me—you only possess the remedy—you only can pour bolm into the wound—you alone can make me wish to live! Will you not—hang it, there is Mr. Gardner, this might !"

And Caplain Heath instantly shut both eyes, and breathed he No, as if in a profound slamber.

heart you recal, you needn't pretend you are asleen! I' learly ou justering just now! Haw! ha! you can't deseive me. Come, open your eyes!"

"Oberth orah-uhroo!" yawned Captain Health. Then as he has he wildered look, he fixed his gaze upon the il!

gentleman before him.

"Glad to see you, Mr Gardner-"

That is a fide-hook. It is no such thing. No man block of service cise at the moment he is popping the question; he have it, sir—hates it! and you'd give your head sir, it I had been a half mile away."

"Do not be too severe," interrupted Edith, "he told me a few moments since that he was troubled with the fever of the iseart. I was about to call you to prescribe for him" ascuming a very serious countenance." It must be attended to immediately. Let me examine your pulse Bent-quick, regular—rather rapid—showing that fever lurks somewhere—yes, the heart throbs faster than ordinary. How long, my fr end, do you suppose this fever has been upon you?"

Captain Heath seeing that he was fairly detected, assumed 51so an air of gravity as he made reply.

"The first symptoms appeared several years ago—I think, about the time I made a call in company with Captain Butler, at your house."

"Several years ago-that is singular," soliloquised Mr. Gardner; "been in his system ever since-doubtful whether it can be era licated or not; I hardly know what to prescribe."

"I think I can make up the prescription myself, if you will only consent to administer it. It is in your hands."

"I consent. Let me know what it is."

"" Edith Gardner! It's out now!"

"My own belove I daughter!" exclaimed Mr. Gardner rising to his feet, as if he had been stricken by a than ler bolt." A difficult dose for me to take as well as to give; but, I agree I to do it. Do you consent my dearest girl?" For a moment the daughter made no reply. Then speaking so low that she intended it should reach her parent's ear only.

"Whatever you wish me to do, that will be my highest pleasure to do."

"At ! ah! I understand what that means. Just the way your mother talked forty years are to her father! Well, you young so mp, inasmuch as you have alrealy taken the heart, I consent to administer the dose. I give her to you, on condition that you never take her from my lome. Death alway must separate us."

"I give you the pledge!" said Captain Heath, rising to the sitting position, his face all a dow with happiness. "If Ellian will take me, she never shall be asked to thwart your shaplest wish, I shall be to her-anything-"

"But," interrupted the blushing mailen, "my dear father forgets what he once said by his danchter marrying a robel."

"Shut your mouth, rogue! I don't know but what the rebels are about half right. Don't say another word about it."

And the old man pas of out of the room

"My dear good father?" exclaimed Elich "I know he would soon to on the right side. It takes some time for him to evercome his projulious, but he always does it so ever of hiter. Heaven blas him! he need not ask as a far his harder of that she seepects is his wish. I would distortion by moment."

"I do not doubt it. Elith, you are a good derghter."

The invalidacy several moments feasting his eyes upon the partial women by his helsile—beautiful in her fail and affection and duifalcess to her parent and to him for more lovely in her more durantee than her physicial—although the larger, to Captain Heath, exceeded that of any women he had ever known. When he spoke it was in a voice that was low and deep with earnest feeling.

" Edith, do you really love me?"

her head, she toplied, " Yes!"

" I'm well!" axeldined Captain Heath, joyously. " Never fil as I do now, an All my existence"

,

"You must let. In a fix days I trust you will be be er," still Hilds, c'es hing his fact er utterance.

The proof salf sy, and the summer was soon gone over. Copin Heath recovered rapidly, and, during the golden I. It is summer role out to proudy upon his horse. Buck Bulley did not first to make his villes, and to keep him well is formed of passing events. These were of such a taire that they obtained the chief the current, when Cuting, who had her on an expedition with several Ouclas in the appearance of the Street of the summing tillers of Captain Butler.

The Tory, up on escaping from his imprisonment at Alberty, uple all laste to New or and, in revenue for the imprisonment he had suffer had too he is of Tryon County, a sound survey element at cost Charry Valley. From Chook Patter, his hother, he had pround the commune had a partial of his remark the expension of his remark the expension of the commune the right about compley the Indians under the communed of Brand warned by Catford and other O. eichs of this contemplated expedition, but he had refused thus far to take may make of strengthening the garrison or of instituting a botter system of defence for the settlement. He would not be the restant Butler would dare to make his appearance of in Tryon County, after escaping so narrowly with his late. County the was intimately acquainted with this office, at both the worst regarding him. The day succeeding this late tessived that he would return to the settlement, and had in his power to prepare the settlers against the expected in the sion.

The commander of the fort at Cherry Valley and been

Upon communicating his intention to Mr. Garler, i. st gentleman requested him to remain a few days bazza, when he and his daughter would accompany him Garler Heath, against his judgment, agreed to do so.

Upon a clear, bracing day in November, the little party set out on their return to Cherry Valley. A strong former's bey acted as coachman, while Captain Heath rode by the side of the carriage. Since the siege of Fort Schuyler, this section had enjoyed comparative quiet, so that Mr. Gurdner felt hille apprehension for the personal safety of Elita and hills. If. There was the shadow of a fear that have test C point Heath which he could not shake off. He knew the industry length to secure his revenge, and he believed that he and Brandt were at that time at no great distance.

On the day that they expected to reach home, the say became overcast. There was a flurry of show, as i Mr. Gardner would have halted, but as they expected to mean the Valley in a few hours, the horses were put at a greater speed, while Captain Heath kept up a rapid salley in most of the carriage.

They had progressed in this manner for a completed hand, and were within a few miles of Cherry Valley, when they reached a all of considerable length. Captain Hother is on a center to the top, where, halting for a moment, he suddenly wheeled around, and or level the driver to prove. At the foot of the hill be caught sight of an Indian coming toward him on a rapid run. The long, sideling, loping trot, and a peculiar motion of the arms, showed at once that

It was Catfoot. The speed at which he ascended the hill proved unmistakeably that he here important tidings.

"What is the matter, Cathot?" he demanded as he approached.

fast ?

Cartier Heath galloped to the bottom of the bill.

must two back instantly. Batter and his Tories and Indians are in the town, massereing the inhabitants, and some of them will so a be out in the surrounding country. I have just been will so a be out in the surrounding country. I have just been

The cardine was instantly wheeled round — the driver in the driver almost as much flight and terror as his predeces:

Observe was instantly wheeled round — the driver of the driver in the driver of the driver of gia, come rois in the rear.

Principle that not only the settlement, but the surrounding concept was in imminent danger, from the merciless savages was worded buston out upon the highways to overtake the first investable officer, after riding several miles, compact of the driver to halt, and announced his intention of last of the order road and driving into the woods.

After considerable difficulty a field was crossed, and they draw several yards into the woods, until checked by the interposing lands of trees. Feeling that for the present they were site, Captain Heath bade them good night, and rode out in a direction of Cherry Valley.

All through that snowy night, father, daughter, and driver worked the dill place of burning buildings against the sky, well is could to the sounds of exultation and terror that were to them. Near midnight, they were excessively alarmed two temps of approaching feet. To their inexpressible could, the new comers proved to be faireds, and, among the name, was the ubiquitous Honyost Schuyler. The last of the county were athering rapitly, and the invaling the was to be attacked on the morrow.

The massacre of Cherry Valley is attributed to the negligence of one man. That man was Colonel Alden, who had command of the fort

attack from the Tories and Indians, he refused to take any means to protect the settlers are mid-him. Information brought him by Indian scouts, he treated with indifference, fond contempt, and satisfied hims of that Boder, are a his narrow escape from the gallows, would not venture into Tryon County again.

the eleventh of November, at an early hour in the aming, in the millst of a snow-storm, the enemy store into the town and took the place by surprise. The officers, who were quartered in private houses, were surrounded, and cities captured or slain. Colonel Alden, in attempting to es ape, was brained by an Indian.

The scenes which followed bailed all description, and we have no desire to dwell upon them. The Minnes of massicres, so fresh in all our min is, are but a faint type of this merciless shaighter of men, women, and children. A very few were reserved for the purpose of exchange. The town was fired in several places, and was soon a heap of single rains.

The garrison in the fort made an heroic defense. They were attacked again and again by the combined forces of the Indians and Tories under, the leadership of Butha and Branda; but, the unerring ritles of the makemen within the fort, brought down their numbers with such deadly registry, that they were glad to give up the attack, and resort to the more congenial calling of destroying unresisting initials as Captain Heath and several others aroused the main of the neighborhood. About two hun hed collected and attacked the sentered bands of the enemy with such fury, that they were driven out of the county.

The rare kindled against Butler was so great, that a number resorved he should never escape from Cherry Valy. Cathest, who had been darting hither and thither through the settlement ever since the massiere begin, informed Captar Hesth that he had taken a north-west direction; and that but few of his men were with him. The officer instrict I him to take a number of his brother Oneills, and pursue the ferocious British as long as there was the least possible chance of overtaking them.

This was what the Indians desired above all things. With a dozen dusky comrades, exclusive of Buck Bailey and Hon yest Schayler, the party took up the trail in pusuit. An hour, later they caught sight of the Tory, riding alone upon orseback. He struck into a rapid gallop upon discovering his pursuers, who followed at the top of their speed.

Batler, being mounted, had the best of it, and was rapidly enving the party behind, when he reached a large creek. Into that he plunged, and swam his horse across. As he came upon the opposite-side, he made an insulting gesture to his pursuers. Cathoot raised his rifle, took deliberate aim, and fired. As the smoke cleared from the front of his face, he saw the Tory's horse gulloping riderless away.

The Oneida, with an exultant yell, sprang ahead of his companions and swam the creek. Reaching the other side, he found Butler bodly wounded. The wretch, who had been merciless to the mother and her babe, now begged piteously for life; but, the reply of the Indian was: "Oriskany, Oriskany! Remember Sherry Valley!" and five minutes later, his guilty soul stool in the presence of its all just Creator.

Late in the day, succeeding the massacre, the party of fixitives who had been concealed in the wood, returned to Ci. rry Valley. In the words of the historian: "The whole the thement exhibited an aspect of entire and complete desolation. The cocks crew from the tops of the forest trees, and Several attempts had been made to fire the place of Mr. Gardner, but, from some cause or other, had failed. It was not until a year or two later that the old gentleman learned that this was owing to the instrumentality of Cathoot and Horyost Schuyler, who usually passed as friends among the devastating Torics and Indians.

Scores of figitives found refuge at this residence, and one is two others in the neighborhood that had escaped the configuration, while they occupied themselves in barying their friends, and endeavoring to erect shelter for themselves. From its askes and embers, phenix-like, this beaution settlement rose again.

It was on a summer day, some three years succeeding the events described in the preceding pages, that Edith Gardner and her father were seated upon the broad porch, in from of their residence. Little change had those two years wrought in either. The father looked perhaps a shade feetier, and there was a more womanly look upon the face of the decreer. But, the parent toyed with the head that by come has shoulder, as he always had done—fondling the rapples of hir, and pressing the warm crimson cheek against his own for fless face. Both were in unusually good spints, it is own that or two before, they had received the intelligence that he in lepen lence of the United States had been acknowledged by Great Britain, and that peace was now declared.

"This is good news indeed, darling," said the father, as ne resumed his pipe.

"Yes, I can hardly realize it, after so much war and suffering as we have undergone."

"There can be no doubt of it. That surrender of Burryne and Lord Cornwallis, I suppose, really decided the matter long ago."

"They have: certainly fought long enough to gain their Independence."

That is true, and I don't know but what I'm ghad of it. The manner in which Colonels Johnson, Brandt, and Bother carried on the war in this section, more than any thing eise, has convinced me that the Colonies were better free than otherwise. Let me see," said the old man, speaking quickly and easerly, "we may expect Captain Heath, I suppose Heigho! there's Honyost, he looks as though he bore some news. See him grin!"

The cadaverous Honyost was seen approaching at a rigid walk. This person, since the exploit performed in the service of General Arnold, had been a true friend to the partiots. He did good service in driving Butler and Brandt from the valley on the day succeeding the massicre, at which time he mustered himself out," at the earnest solicitation of his mother, who could not bear that he should run the rigid risk of capture by his enemies. He dwelt with her at Little Falls, and the extraordinary success of his feat made him so celebrated, that his name was known at a far greater distance from home than he had ever traveled.

Honyost's face were an expression of good nature, and he burst into a loud haw! haw! as he caught sight of Mr. Gardner and Edith.

"What is it that pleases you so much?" inquired the farmer, as he came up the walk.

"I've news for Edith, haw! haw!"

"Don't keep me in suspense then," laughed the daughter

" Haint you heard it now?"

"How am I to tell before I know what you mean?"

" Way there's peace, haw!"

"That is surely good news, but we learned that severil weeks are, Il myost. Is that all the news you bring?"

"No; that din't the news at all. Who do you s'pose is down in the valley?"

"A great many persons I should say."

"I know, but this one is a fellow what you and I thinks a good deal of."

"Back Balley, who has always been such a friend to us?"

"No; my brother! Nick came down from Little Falls to see the place, since they've been building it up Ain't that good news, now?"

" Not particularly so, that I know of-"

Wal, if that ain't, then it's good news that Captain Heath is there, and will be here in half an hour—yonder be comes, this minute, and I'll be hanged if Back Bulley ain't with him!"

Eith Gurdner could not repress a start, nor keep back the Lalf-uttered exclamation of joy as she distinguished the two persons mentioned, approaching. A moment later, they both were upon the porch, receiving the congratulations of their friends. Cuptain Heath never looked half so handsome and guillant, in the eyes of Elith Gardner, as he did at that moment, when he stood before her in his faded uniform and missoured face, which had received an ugly wound since they had last met.

"We come, welcome, welcome!" said Mr. Gardner, as the tears came in his eyes, and he shook the hunds of the new comers. "You come now, never to go to war again, I trust."

"I hope so, although Buck was just telling me that he has become so used to it, that he does not know how he will content himself."

The jovial hunter seemed unspeakably fell of jey and good humor, as he did nothing but laugh and shake hands, and shake hands and laugh. This, combined with the uprour of Honyost Schuyler, for the time drowned every thing else. When they had become somewhat quieted, Mr. Gar her said

"We were expecting you, Captain-Ellith especially"

"I am glad to hear it," replied the officer, who had above her hand, and who stood looking down in her rall at the "I hope it will be the last time you will ever expect me."

"What do you mean?"

- "As she has promised never to leave your roof, I ask permission to remain under it myself, as one of the most datical and faithful sons-in-law that you can possibly have—"
- "Tut, tut, there's some of your foolish questions again

"I have already done so."

"Well, I am sure that is sufficient, without bothering me-

Buck Bailey and Honyost Schuyler were in helging their mirth to an immoderate extent, but gradually they became more quiet, and their feelings grew more thoughtfue and subdued, for they were disbanded volunteers, who were soon to pursue their ways in wilely different squeres—Honyost to all the soil at Little Falls, and Buck to take up his murch for the far West.

Captain Engene Heath and Elith, his companion in life: they too, became more quiet, and their feelings more throughful and subdued as the years followed one after another. and until full of days and honor and happiness, they were finally laid in the valley with their fathers.

DIME DIALOGUES

For School Exhibitions and Home Entertainments.

Nos. I to II inclusive. 15 to 5 Popular Dialogues and Dramas in each book. Each volume 100 12mo pages, sent post-paid, on receipt of price, ten centa, Beadle & Adams, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

These values have been presured with eather all reference to their availability for Exhibitions, The great was to a second or with the formation of a range, and ansted to be fit and A. . A A D 1 Not I burrland of every oge, both man and terrale. It is far to assume that I wit, pathot, humor and tentiment.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 1.

Masting of the Mines. Firm ey mor in cara. Interest the Part rective. These of the care of the transfer and features. I'm -m, i rtwo lad as,

The horners. French me, Il w in Could be two horse Tie grave. . M. Friw , tong tide

Tidara berte. Enterna

Tree we es m Wa. at i. te. M hand famale. The horr's Re conny 19 terms es at 1 mais Mrs. To Cores to Franch the les Tro V age was the Gentleman, Lot cout le The Mission of the rates I very might ear. . In the and one make.

Hi to burg. For tive meahars. The Secretof Success. For three speakers. houng America. Tures males and two tema es, Jusephine & Destiny, Four lemaies, one ma e. (The F- a of the Itsel, For three male speakers Digmatten. For tures made speakers, in a limerar t Confedenced. For two boys. The First Y of Man. Firsten nicles.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 2.

The Genius of I hartw. I mases and I females, 1 How to Write P palar' Stories. Two males. (were at or, I to little than Salber, I my G -d and has my said. Severa connectors. A Serestion at Last. For two mana-To rough to a loop mee and two tempera ! to terem orn, for two maters I stall of the Fore Queen. Several fe nates. Transfer to the term to the term tors.

ers, a set ters. To Iwa Land. For two males.

Trying the Characters. For tures males. The Hanne Family. For several anticale, The itempowe, her several characters.

I o New and the tad. For two males, The Three Men of Stones. For four males. The Old Lady's Will. For fear times. Two : - 18 1 A ... t s Vas 1 to the Caty. For sov. I he Latte Phil sophers. For two little girls.

How to Find an Heir. For five a alesthe birthes. I rex young trules.

At . . . I E gue. The last prest 2 Five males and one females To be and Travelet. But two maies.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 3.

The May Queen. For an outling school. I'mais the former. Francies. Nee gri 1' > ' u. A Far . P riverside. To Two Romans. For two mules. Carte g | maer la lemates. 2 rates, 1 femate. 1 a Same. Scondacena, Per two males. Licaning the Drait but Butter do mail to

The Genteel Cock. For two males. Manter, we. I or two mares and two females,) Pat not fleremental es. A H respire, 4 males " ow og the White Feather, 4 males, I females I to battle Ca ... A hecttative, bur one made,

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 4.

The Front King. For ten or more persons. Fire; " n ! " I wee ma ea and two females. A some true " Paul Pry " For tour males. Francis of arms, Francis of arms, Francis and one females I ar wand Jan. For two mains ar a or a train a line, Clock and Broom. For three little girls. To May, AF ra Faner, Portal tegers ! a I git Way. A College v. For two boys. The F section Process. 2 males several forms as What the Ladier Sans. For two males. The Cor . . F reavers | man and and The Reward of Benevolence. Fur four mains, Trendingy. A Discussion. For twenty maire IT. o Letter. For two maires file Stath'etown Volunteey, 2 males, I female The Times of Dress. A Colleges, Parter, I female The Crimes of Dress. A Colleges, Partwo have,

ME DIALOGUES, NO. 8. The Three Guesses, For school or party. S. L. rett. A " Inree Persons' " Fa c. January Property and for a few and Tee Eta P. See atv. Prober 1 n to car. Fra at . ' la . For severas temase characters Matr Name. An Actog Charate. The severe in the severe in a severe The set . | Boys' I - hunsl. | rien boys. A large Trage o. Several ma as a diferales. Li. w Not to Get an Answer. For two tempares.

Pritting on Airs. A Collogue. For two maios. Tie Stragit Mark. Fragrand L vs. Two sees of life. At For ten girle Ir gira t from Marino Factore. I a S x Virtues, horaix coung lan es. I gle at man at Home. For two mates. Fastionable Requirements. For three girls. A Bovy of I's (Eyes), For eight or less little gizle

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 6.

The Way They Kent a Secret. Main and females | The Two Connectors, For three males, T . P at under I' then tee. For five mayee, With am Tall. For a whole se onl. Wiman's Kighta. Seven females and two males The Libel Suit. For two females and one maker The Generous Jew. For any ma ea. Chr swnna Fair ea. For several little Baupping. For three manue and one female.

The V-taries of Filly For a number of females, 1 nt Betsy's Beaux. Four females and two males, One strong Fair on. For several listes girle, The Taree hings. For two steles.

Bime School Series-Speakers,

DIME DIALECT SPEAKER, No. 25.

Dat's wat's de matter, 'All about a bee, Tie Mississippi miracle, Scandul, Ven to trie co ms la, Desc and vot heary haf I e pesser vav. Pat O'Finherty on wo man's T ' is, The home rulers, how I make themak, tipes " hi same, " Here the Leawson or Aparty, Markett in Law, He adm't sen the farm | 1 | I n terwood, plist, I. chile story of Frank 100 0 KISC. would I were a buy lgn B. A pathetic story,

A dirk wie view, the part of German, Mary to and a total and to A log.thv-1 b wrse, 11 1 Mrs. Grimes, MIS AND CALL, to I better only, 1 11, S | | Green's words,

I stest Cr nese ontrare. My pe', bor's dogs, The man lest destiny of Contract Mythogonya the latent, Pergy M Caun, S, mys ir.m J an L. De cr.un stances ou d. $ 1. Wall n. Day's nuttin new under allast all Ger $1000. A Neuro rat glads poets TERLY CAR. P Cars C type, 27, 18, Ine pur penner's ora four expresses wiews, A. Districary a was to last Plant int Jange by truth The cow. I für Jiefet,

1 . 9. T. c. Note As. Lege at 1 A ton, Termine traces N 1 2 I will be to such the s 1 .0 C * - ". id get en e n'err to a out a berty, Wat west.

DIME READINGS AND RECITATIONS, No. 24.

The Irishman's pany- | The imc'lf rest, TATE A. Trenguing redagent Le tragedy at lour ace flat. Rathard Norml, (area of Curson, B . . C .. Jin Beck. Tue braketnan et.urch, Passen Moonl's sur-21 - 2 % Arguing the questi n. Jun Wolfe and the cate,

Has or at pome, I is hergenest a story, Invisor so. Proguette at fourscore, the alwest the ervit of mertal terrount The Collins Handarde, The angles of a story, A carmonic for presides to K sa catala An accession to the fanil Y.

Dutter. Tred sating party, I our Tafs. A M ganger in Fratice. N I car to spare, Mrs. Breezy's 1 40 2 10 1 R ca of ages, J. Carant Pompey hal that & termely Abbre & Lact, The rewat st. l'at's correspondence.

When the cows o me; I can do on isquise Maing have. ALE CITY I be are at want and rook, The ungrant art. 1 - 1 - 53 - - - 0, Taw Status Lock T.Z. 101 . 4 I TO SHE ST I me water mill, ham a culet. r tate; a ci tie dead, S william y AD CASAY OR CLEOK.

If The above books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be set t, post-yeard, to and midrom, on receipt of price, 10 cents each,

BEADLE AND ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

STANDARD BOOKS OF GAMES AND PASTIMES.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

HAND-BOOK of SUMMER ATHLETIC SPORTS.

Contents:-Pedestrianism; Walkers vs. Runners; Scientific Walking (3 cuts); Scientific Running (2 cuts); Dress for Pedestrians; Training for a Match; Laying out a track (1 cut); Conducting a Match; Records of Pedestrianism; Jumping and Pole-leaping (1 cut); Bicyching; Rules for Athletic Meetings; Hare and Hounds (1 cut); Archery (1 cut). Fully illustrated. By Capt. Fred. Whittaker.

HAND-BOOK OF CROQUET.

A Complete Guide to the Principles and Practice of the Game. This popular pastime has, during the few years of its existence, rapidly outcrown the first vague and imperfect rules and regulations of its inventor; and, as almost every house at which it is played adopts a different code of laws, it becomes a difficult matter for a stranger to assimilate his play to that of other people. It is, therefore, highly desirable that one uniform system should be generally adopted, and hence the object of this work is to establish a recognized method of playing the game.

DIME BOOK OF 100 GAMES.

Out-door and in-door SUMMER GAMES for Tourists and Families in the Country, Picnics, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeits and Conundrants for Childhood and Youth, Single and Married, Grave and Gay. A Pocket Hand-book for the Summer Season.

CRICKET AND FOOT-BALL.

A desirable Cricketer's Companion, containing complete instructions in the elements of Bowling, Batting and Fielding; also the Revised Laws of the Crime; Remarks on the Dutles of Unpires; the Mary-le Bone Cricket Club Rules and Regulations; Bets, etc. By Henry Chadwick.

HAND-BOOK OF PEDESTRIANISM.

Giving the Rules for Training and Practice in Walking, Running, Leaping. Vaulting, etc. Edited by Henry Chadwick.

YACHTING AND ROWING.

This volume will be found very complete as a guide to the conduct of watercraft, and full of interesting information alike to the amateur and the novice. The chapter referring to the great rowing-match of the Oxford and Cambridge clubs on the Thames, will be found particularly interesting.

RIDING AND DRIVING.

A sure guide to correct Horsemanship, with complete directions for the road and field; and a specific section of directions and information for female equestricle. Drawn largely from "Stonehenge's 'fine manual, this volume will be found all that can be desired by those seeking to know all about the horse, and his management in harness and under the saddle.

GUIDE TO SWIMMING.

Comprising Advisory Instructions; Rules upon Entering the Water; General Directions for Swimming; Diving: How to Come to the Surface; Swimming on the Back; How to Swim in times of Danger; Surf-bathing—How to Manage the Waves, the Tides, etc.; a Chapter for the Ladies; a Specimen Female Swimming School; How to Manage Cases of Drowning; Dr. Franklin's Code for Swimming; etc. Thustrated. By Capt. Philip Peterson.

For sale by all newsdealers or sent. post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price-ran canas each.

BEADLE'S NEW DIME NOVELS.

448 The Two Hunters. 502 The Rangers of the 348 Table, the Trailer. 323 Red Slayer. 449 The Traitor Spy M LAWK. 3m4 The Phantom Foe. 339 The Boy Chief. 503 The Double Hero. 450 Inchiray Hunter. 340 Tim, the Trailer. 395 Blue Anchor, 451 Little Moceasin. 504 Alice Wilde. 3m6 Red-skin's Pledge. 341 Red Az, the Giant. 197 Quadroon Spy. 452 The White Hermit. 505 Ruth Margerie, 342 Stella, the Spy. 453 The Island Bride. 500 Privateer's Cruise. 343 White Avenger. 398 Black Rover, 607 The Indian Queen. 454 The Perest Princess. 399 Red Belt. 344 The Indian King. Bus The Wrecker's Frize. 345 The Long Trail. 455 The Trail Hunters. 400 The Two Trails. 549 The Slave Sculpter. 456 Backwoods Banditti. 346 Kirk, the Guide. 401 The Ice-Flend. 347 The Phantom Trail. 510 Parkwoods Bride. 402 The Red Prince. 457 Ruby Roland. 403 The First Trail. 458 Laughing Eyes. till (b p, the Cave Child 348 The Apache Guide. 404 Shoot-Anchor Tom. 459 Muhegan Maidens 512 Buj Hulden, Trapper 849 The Mad Miner. 460 The Quaker Scout. 513 Cutward Bound. 350 Keen-eye, Ranger, 405 Old Avoirdupois. 406 White Gladintor. 481 Sumter's Scouts. 514 East and West. 351 Blue Belt, Guide. 515 The Indian Princese 467 The five Champions. 352 On the Trail. 407 Blue Clipper. 498 Red Dan. 516 The Forest Spy. 462 The Two Guards. 352 The Specter Spyra 354 Old Bald-boad. 4.19 The Fire-Eater. 484 Quindaro. 517 Graylock, the Guide. 465 Rob Ruskin. 518 Off and On -355 Red Knite, Chief. 410 Blackhawk. 356 Sib Cone, Trapper. 411 The Lost Ship. 519 Seth Jones. 466 The Rival Rovers. 520 Emerald Necklace. 412 Black Arrow. 467 Ned Starling. 357 The Bear-Hunter. 521 Maineaka. 468 Single Hand. 358 Bashful Bill, Spy. 413 White Serpent. 4m9 Tippy, the Texan. 522 Burt Bunker. 414 The Lost Captain. 359 The White Chief. 415 The Twin Trailers. 170 Young Mustanger. 523 Pale Face "quaw. 360 Cortina, the Scourge, 524 Winifred Winthrep. 471 The Hunted Life. 41st Death's Head Ranger 361 The Squaw Spy. 362 Scout of '76. 417 Captain of Captains. 417 The Buffalo Trapper. 525. Wresker's Daughter 418 Warrior Princess. 4:3 Old Zip. 576 Hearts Forever. 363 Spanish Jack. -454 Foghorn Phil. 419 The Blue Band. 527 The Frontier Angel. 364 Masked Spv. 490 The Squaw Chief. 528 Florida. 475 Mussiont, the Brave. 365 Kirk, the Renegade. 4v1 The Flying Scout. 476 Snow-Bird. 529 The Maid of Esopus. 356 Dingle, the Outlaw. 477 Dragoon's Bride. 422 Sonora Ben. $30 Ahmo's Plot. 367 The Green Ranger. 428 The Sea King 478 Old Honesty. 531 Too Water Waif 368 Montbars, Scourge. 5%? The Hursers total 1 424 Mountain Gid. 419 Hald Kagle. , 369 Melainora. 370 Thorapath, Trailer. 425 Death-Trailer. 480 Black Princess. fad Plates and I cres. 425 The Crested Serpent. 441 The White Brave. 5 4 (September, the live n 371 Foul-weather Jack. 442 The Riffeman of the 531 White Parent Farer. 372 The Black Rider. 427 Arkaneas Kit. all Wetzel, the Sout-428 The Cornair Prince. Miami 378 The Helpiess Hand. 483 The Mones Hunter. 63 Tro Q HAPPERS TT. 4.4 Ethan Allen's Rifies. 374 The Lake Rangers. ben la .ed fore a tress 4.9) Little Thunderbolt. 484 The Brigantina. 375 Alone on the Plains, 376 Phantom Horseman.) 411 The Falcon Rover. 45 Put. Pomfret's Ward. 5 .9 Uncle Eschiel. 540. Wastward Bound 377 Winona. 432 Honest Hand. 486 Simple Phil. 378 Silent Shot. 4 433 The Stone Chief. 487 Jo Davison's Client. 541 Want Passes With Agree to . art. 879 The Phantom Ship. 434 The Gold Demon. 488 Ruth Harland. 449 The Gulch Miners. 84% Nastan Tools 435 Eutawan, Slaver. 380 The Red Rider. 381 Grissly-Hunters. . -436 The Masked Guide. 490 Captain Molly. 544 Marte, the China of 437 The Conspirators. 491 Wingenund. tie Fra rie. 342 The Mad Ranger. 4th Sw fiwing, Squaw. 492 The Partisan Spv. in I fie bemeine balppar. 545 1. gt tr. ng Jn. 646 The Bases title et 384 The Red Covote. 439 Caribon Zip. 493 The Peon Prince. 446 The Privatues. 494 The Sea Captain. 385 The Hammark. Antwerp. 547 Madge Wylde. 386 The Black Wizard. 441 Arbe Black Spy. 495 Gray beard. 442 The Doors ad finter. 496 The Border Rivals. 54m I'm t roose histers. 347 The Mad Horseman 388 Pricateor's Bride. 443 Barden, the Rasger. 497 The Unknown. 549 Star Exes 444 Th Gray Scalp. 540 Myra, the Child of 494 Sagamore of Saco. 389 Jaguar Queen. . 445 The Peddler Spy. 499 The King's Man. Adoption. 390 Shadow Jack. 446 The White Cance. 500 Aftent and Ashore. $51 Mawkeye Herry. 391 Eagle Plume. Sul The Wrong Man. . 447 Eph Peters. 292 Ocean Outlaw.

The following will be issued in the order and on the dates indicated:

552 Dead Shot. By Albert W. Aiken. Ready September 25th. 558 The Boy Miners. By Fiward S. Eus. Ready October with. 554 Blue Dick. By Captain Mayne Reid. Ready October 2nd. 555 Nat Wolfe. B. Mrs. M. V. Victor. Rosty November 6th.

556 The White Trucker. By the author of "The Boy Miners." Ready November 30th.

557 The Outlaw's Wife. Br Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. Ready December 4th. 554 The Tall Trapper. By A.bert W. Atkan. Ready I becember 18th. 559 The Island Plente. By Captain Mayne Reid. Ready January let.

560 The Roy Ranger. By till Coomes. Ready January 15th.
561 Bees, the Trapper. By Lieutenant J. H. Randelph. Ready January 29th.
562 The French Spy. By W. J. Hamilton. Ready February 12th.

548 Long Shot, By Captain Comstick. Ready February 16th.

564 The Gunmaker of the Border. By James L. Bowen. Ready March 11th.

565 Red Hand. By A G. Piper. Ready March 25th.

566 Ren, the Trapper. By Major Law . W. Carson. Ready April 8th.

567 The Specter Chief. By Soulin Robins, Roady April 27d.

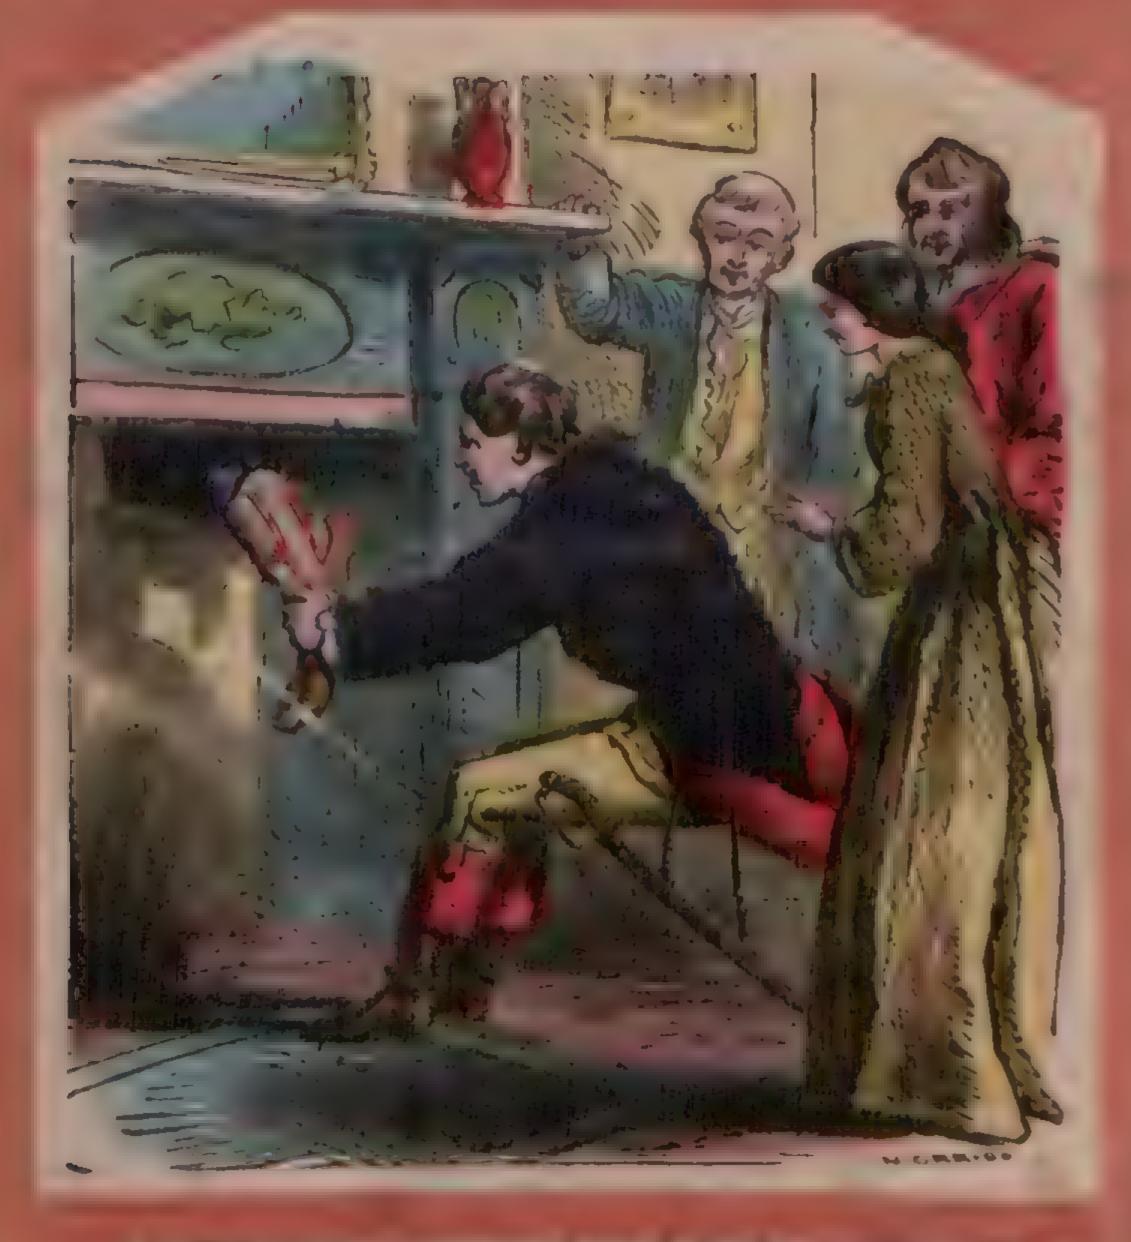

Published semi-monthly. For sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, single numbers, ten cents; six months (13 Nos.) $1.25; one year (26 Nos.) $2.50.

New Serten,

BEADLE'S

Old Series

NEW DINE NOVELS)

Rangers of the Mohawk.

Ev.S. ELLIS.

Popular Dime Hand-Books.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Rach volume 100 12mo. pages, sent post-paid on receipt of price—ten cents each STANDARD SCHOOL SERIES.

1. Dime American Speaker.
2. Dime National Speaker.
3. Dime Patriotic Speaker.
4. Dime Comic Speaker.
5. Dime Elocutionist.

6. Dime Humorous Speaker.
7. Dime Standard Speaker.
8. Dime Stump Speaker.

9. Dime Juvenile Speaker. 10. Dime Spread-eagle Speaker.

11. Dime Debater and Chairman's Guide.

12. Dime Exhibition Speaker.

18. Dime School Speaker.

14. Dime Ludicrous Speaker.

15. Carl Pretzel's Komikal Speaker.

Dime Youth's Speaker.
 Dime Bloquent Speaker.

18. Dime Hall Columbia Speaker.

19. Dime Serio-Comic Speaker. 20. Dime Select Speaker.

Dime Melodist. (Music and Words.)
Behool Melodist. (Music and Words.)

DIMB DIALOGUES. Dime Dialogues Number One. Dime Dialogues Number Two. Dime Dialogues Number Three. Dime Dialogues Number Fonr. Dime Dialogues Number Five. Dime D. alogues Number Six. Dime Dialogues Number Seven. Dime Dialogues Number Eight. Dime Dialogues Number Nine. Dime D alogues Number Ten. Dime Dialogues Number Rieven. Dime D. alogues Number Twelve. Dime Dialogues Number Thirteen Dime Dialogues Number Fourteer Dime Dialogues Number Fifteen. Dime Dialogues Number Sixteen. Dime Dialogues Number Seventee Dime Dialogues Number Eighteer Dime Dialogues Number Nineteen Dime Dialogues Number Twenty. Dime Dudogues Number Twenty-

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERIES.

1-DIME GENTS' LETTER-WRITER - Embracing Forms, Models, Suggestand Rules for the use of all classes, on all occasions.

2 -DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE-For Ladies and Gentlemen: being a Go True Gentility and Good Breeding, and a Directory to the Usages of socie

3 -DIME BOOK OF VERSES - Comprising Verses for Valentines, Mottoes lets, St. Valentine verses, Bridal and Marriage Verses, Verses of Lov

4-DIME BOOK OF DREAMS-Their Roman ce and Mystery; with a compared temperating Dictionary. Compiled from the most accredited sources.

5-DIME FORTUNE-TELLER-Comprising the art of Fortune-Telling, read Character, etc.

6-DIME LADIES' LETTER-WRITER-Giving the various forms of La School Days, Love and Friendship, of Society, etc.

7-BIME LOVERS' CASKET -A Treatise and Guide to Friendship, Love and and Marriage. Embracing also a complete Floral Dictionary, etc.

8 - DIME BALL-ROOM COMPANION -And Guide to Dancing. Givin of Kniquette, hints on Private Parties, toilettes for the Ball-room, etc.

9 -BOOK OF 100 GAMES -Out-door and In-door SUMMER GAMES for 'and Families in the Country, Picuice, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forf

10 -DIME CHESS INSTRUCTOR-A complete hand-book of instruction the entertaining injusteries of this most interesting and fascinating of 11-DIME BOOK OF CROQUET-A complete guide to the game, with the ruise, diagrams, Croquet Dictionary, Parlor Croquet, etc.

12-DIME BOOK OF BEAUTY-A delightful book, full of interesting in the bands of every one who would be beaution. It deserves a place in the hands of every one who would be beaution.

DIME ROBLEBON CRUSOE-In large octavo, double columns, illustrated

FAMILY SERIES.

1. DIME COOK BOOK. 2. DIME RECIPE BOOK.

A DENE HOUSEWIFE'S MARUAL

4. DIME FAMILY PHYSICIAN 5. DIME DRESSMAKING AND LINEWY.

The above books are sold by Newsdeniers everywhere, or will be seen sold to any address, on receipt of price, 10 cents such. BEADLE & A Pablishers, we William Street, New York.

RANGERS OF THE MOHAWK.

A TALE OF CHERRY VALLEY.

BY EDWARD S. ELLIS,

AUTHOR OF THE FOLLOWING DIME NOVELS!

TIVAL HUNTERS

THE LONG TRAHL

IN THE PHANTON TRAIL.

LIS THE APACHE GUIDE.

IN ON THE TRAIL.

376 PHANTOM HORSEMAN.

455 THE TRAIL HUNTERS.

460 THE QUAKER SCOUT.

DEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, 98 WILLIAM STREET.

Chake hands and laugh. This, combined with the uprear of Honyost Schuyler, for the time drown I every tains class. When they had become somewhat quieted, Mr. Gardner said

"We were expecting you, Captain-Edith especially"

"I am glad to hear it," replied the officer, who had take" her hand, and who stood looking down in her radiant face "I hope it will be the last time you will ever expect me."

"What do you mean?"

"As she has promised never to leave your root, I ask promission to remain under it myself, as one of the nost detict and faithful sons in-law that you can possibly have—"

" Tut, tut, there's some of your foolish questions again

Ank her !"

"I have already done so."

DINE BOW NO

"Well, I am sure that is sufficient, without bothering me-

Buck Bailey and Honyost Schuyler were in hilling their mirth to an immoderate extent, but gradually they be and more quiet, and their feelings grew more the whith and subdued, for they were disbanded volunteers, who were soon to pursue their ways in wilely different spheres—Honyost to all the soil at Little Falls, and Back to take up his much for the far West.

Captain Eagene Heath and Elith, his companion in Ufer they too, became more quiet, and their feelings more than the fall and subdued as the years followed one after an after. I do until full of days and honor and happiness, they were thank juid in the valley with their fathers.

THE BAD

DIME DIALOGUES

For School Exhibitions and Home Entertainments.

Nos. 1 to 21 inclusive. 15 to 25 Popular Dialogues and Dramas in each book. Each volume 100 I'mo pages, sent post-paid, on receipt of price, ten cents, Beadle & Adams, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

These volumes have been prepared with especial reference to their availability for Exhibitions, being adapted to schools and parlors with or without the furniture of a stage, and suited to SCHOL ARS AND YOUNG PEOPLE of every age, both male and female. It is fair to assume that I tother books in the market, at any price, contain so many useful and available dialogues and drames of wit, pathor, humor and centiment,

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 1.

Meeting of the Muses. For nine young ladies. Balting a Live Englishman. For tures boys. Tamo's Coronation. For male and female. Fashion. For two ladies. The Rebestsal. For six boys. Which will you Choose! For two boys. The Queen of May. For two little girls. The Tea-Party. For four ladies. Three Scenes in Wesided Life. Malaand female. The Year's Reckoning. 12 females and I male. The Mission of the Spirits. Five young ladies, Hobnobbing. For five speakers. The Secret of Success. For three speakers. Young America. Three males and two females. Josephine's Destiny. Four females, one male. The Folly of the Duel. For three male speakers. Dogmatism. For three male speakers, The Ignorant Confounded. For two boys. The Fast Young Man. Fortwo males. Birs. Smilles' Confession. For male and female. The Village with One Gentleman. For eight for males said one male.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 2.

The Genius of Liberty 2 males and 1 female. Cinderella; or, The Little Glass Slipper. The New and the Old. For two males. Doing Good and Saying Bad. Several characters, A Sensation at Last. For two males. The Golden Rule. Two males and two females. The Gift of the Fairy Queen. Several females. Taken to and Done For. For two characters. The Country Aunt's Visit to the City. For several characters.

The Two Romans. For two males. Trying the Characters. For three males. The Happy Family. For several "aninals." The Rainbow, For several characters,

How to Write ' Popular' Stories. Two males. The Greenhorn. For two males, The Three Men of Science. For four males The Old Lady's Will. For four males. The Little Phil sophers. For two little girls. How to Find an Heir. For five males. The Virtues. For six young Lidies. A Connubial Eclogue. The Public meeting. Five males and one female, The English Traveler. For two males.

E DIALOGUES, NO. 3.

The May Queen. For an entire school, Dress Reform Coveration. For ben females. Keeping Bad Company. A Farce. For five males. The Two Romans. For two males. Courting Under Difficulties. 2 males, 1 female. The Same. Second scene. For two males. National Representatives. A Burlesque. 4 males. Showing the White Feather. 4 males, I female. Excaping the Deaft. For numerous males. The Battle Call. A Recitative. For one male.

The Genteel Cook. For two males. Masterpiece. For two males and two females.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 4. The Frest King. For ten or more persons. Starting in Life. Three males and two females. A Scene from " Paul Pry." For four males. Faith, Hope and Charity. For three little girls. The Charms. For three males and one temals, Darby and Joan. For two males and one female. Bee, Clock and Broom. For three little girls. The May. A Floral Fancy. For six little girls. The Right Way. A Colloquy. For two boys. The Gentle Client. Forseveral males, one female The Reward of Benevolence. For four males, Firenology. A Discussion. For twenty males, The Letter. For two mules,

The Stubb'etown Volunteer. 2 males, I female The Enchanted Princess. 2 males, several females What the Ledger Says. For two males. Honor to Whom Honor is Due. 7 males, I female The Crimes of Dress. A Colloquy. For two boys,

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. &

The Three Guesses. For school or parlor. Sectiment. A "Three Persony" Fa ce. Behind the Curtain. For males and females. The Eta Pi Society. Five boys and a teacher. Examination Day. For several female characters. Trading in "Trace" For several males. The School Boys Tribunal. For ien boys. A Loose Tongue. Several males and females. How Not to Get an Answer. For two females.

Petting on Airs. A Colloquy. For two males. The Straight Mark. For several boys. Two ideas of Life. A Colloquy. For ten girls. Extract from Marino Fallero. Ma-try-Money. An Acting Charade. The Six Virtues. For aix young ladies. The Irishman at Home. For two males. Fashionable Requirements. For three girls, A Berry of I's (Eyes). For eight or less little girls

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 6.

The Way They Kept a Secret. Male and females. The Two Counselors. For three males. The Post under Difficulties. For five males. The Votaries of Folly. For a number of William Tell. For a whole school. Woman's Rights. Seven females and two males. All is not Gold that Glitters. Male and females. The Generous Jew, For six males. Amending. For three males and one female.

The Votaries of Folly. For a number of females, Aunt Betay's Beaux. Four females and two males. The Libel Suit. For two females and one male Santa Claus. For a number of boys. Christmas Fairies. For several little girls. The Three Rings. For two maios.

DIME DIALECT SPEAKER, No. 23.

Dat's wat's de matter, [All about a bee, The Mississippi miracle, Scandal, Ven te tide cooms in, Dose lama vot Mary haf Te pesser vay, man's rights, The home rulers, how Tobias so to speak, they "spakes," Hezekiah Dawson on A parody, Mothers-in-law, He didn't well the farm, The true story of Franklin's kite, would I were a boy again, a pathetic story,

A dark side view. On learning German, Pat O'Finherty on wo- Mary's shmall vite lamb A healthy discourse, Old Mrs. Grimes, Mars and cate, Bill Underwood, pflot, Old Granley, The pill peddler's ora- Our candidate's views, tion, Widder Green's words

Latest Chinese outrage, My neighbor's dogs, The manifest destiny of Condensed Mythology the Irishman, Peggy McCaun, Sprays from Josh Billings, De circumstances ob do A doketor's drubbles. sitiwation, Dar's nuffin new under The illigant affair at de sun. A Negro religious poem, That little baby rous That violin, Picnic delights, Dundreary's wisdom, last Plain language by truth- The crow. ful Jane, Pictus, The Nereides, Legends of Attica, The stove-pipe tragedy The coming man, Muldoon's, the corner, A genewine interest An invitation to bird of liberty, Out west.

DIME READINGS AND RECITATIONS, No. 24.

Ine Irishman's pano- | The dim old forest, rama, The lightning-rod agent The tragedy at four ace fist, Ruth and Naoml, Carey of Corson, Bables, John Reed, The brakeman at church, Passun Mooah's surmount, Arguing the question. him Wolfe and the cals, Rasher at home, The Sergeant's story. David and Golish, Dreaming at fourscore, Why should the spirit of mortal be proud! The coming mustache, The engineer's story, A candidate for president, Roll call, An accession to the family,

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF

Charles of the second of the second of the second

When the cows come home, The donation party, Tommy Taft, A Michigander in France, Not one to spare, Mrs. Breezy's pink Junch. Rock of ages, J. Casar Pompey Squash's termon, Annie's ticket, The newsboy, Pat's correspondence, Death of th' owd squise Mein tog Shueid, At Elberon, The cry of womanhood. The judgment day, The burst bubble, Curiew must not ring to-night, The swell, The water mill, Sam's letter, Footsteps of the dead, Charlty, An essay on cheek.

AND REAL PROPERTY AND PERSONS ASSESSED.

The above books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be sent, post-paid, to and midroes, on receipt of price, 10 cents each.

the Control of the Control of the Control of the Control of Control of the Contro

BEADLE AND ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

STANDARD BOOKS OF GAMES AND PASTIMES.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

HAND-BOOK of SUMMER ATHLETIC SPORTS.

Contents:—Pedestrianism; Walkers vs. Runners; Scientific Walking (3 cuts); Scientific Running (2 cuts); Dress for Pedestrians; Training for a Match; Laying out a Track (1 cut); Conducting a Match; Records of Pedestrianism; Jumping and Pole-leaping (1 cut); Bicycling; Rules for Athletic Meetings: Hare and Hounds (1 cut); Archery (1 cut). Fully illustrated. By Capt. Fred. Whittaker.

HAND-BOOK OF CROQUET.

A Complete Guide to the Principles and Practice of the Game. This popular pastime has, during the few years of its existence, rapidly outgrown the first vague and imperfect rules and regulations of its inventor; and, as almost every house at which it is played adopts a different code of laws, it becomes a difficult matter for a stranger to assimilate his play to that of other people. It is, therefore, highly desirable that one uniform system should be generally adopted, and hence the object of this work is to establish a recognized method of playing the game.

DIME BOOK OF 100 GAMES.

Out-door and in-door SUMMER GAMES for Tourists and Families in the Country, Picnics, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeits and Conundrums for Childhood and Youth Single and Married, Grave and Gay. A Pocket Hand-book for the Summer Season.

CRICKET AND FOOT-BALL.

A desirable Cricketer's Companion, containing complete instructions in the elements of Bowling, Batting and Fielding; also the Revised Laws of the Game; Remarks on the Duties of Umpires; the Mary-le-Bone Cricket Club Rules and Regulations; Bets, etc. By Henry Chadwick.

HAND-BOOK OF PEDESTRIANISM.

Giving the Rules for Training and Practice in Walking, Running, Leaping, Vaulting, etc. Edited by Henry Chadwick.

YACHTING AND ROWING.

This volume will be found very complete as a guide to the conduct of watercraft, and full of interesting information alike to the amateur and the novice. The chapter referring to the great rowing-match of the Oxford and Cambridge clubs on the Thames, will be found particularly interesting.

RIDING AND DRIVING.

A sure guide to correct Horsemanship, with complete directions for the road and field; and a specific section of directions and information for female equestrians.

Drawn largely from "Stonehenge's 'fine manual, this volume will be found all brawn be desired by those seeking to know all about the horse, and his management in harness and under the saddle.

GUIDE TO SWIMMING.

Comprising Advisory Instructions; Rules upon Entering the Water; General Directions for Swimming; Diving: How to Come to the Surface; Swimming on the Back; How to Swim in times of Danger; Surf-bathing—How to Manage the Back; How to Swim in times of Danger; Surf-bathing—How to Manage Waves, the Tides, etc.; a Chapter for the Ladies; a Specimen Female Swiming School; How to Manage Cases of Drowning; Dr. Franklin's Code for Swimmerte. Illustrated. By Capt. Philip Peterson.

For sale by all newsdealers or sent. post-paid, to any address, on reof price-ten cents each.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, 98 WILLIAM ST., N.

BEADLE'S NEW DIME NOVELS.

338 Table, the Trailer. 339 The Boy Chief. 340 Tim, the Trailer. 341 Red Ax, the Giant. 342 Stella, the Spy. 342 White Avenger. 344 The Indian King. 345 The Long Trail. 346 Kirk, the Guide. 347 The Phantom Trail. 348 The Apache Guide. 349 The Mad Miner. 350 Keen-eye, Ranger. 251 Blue Belt, Guide. 352 On the Trail. 353 The Specter Spy. 354 Old Bald-head. 355 Red Knife, Chiel. 356 Sib Cone, Trapper. 357 The Bear-Hunter. 358 Bashful Bill, Spy. The White Chief. 360 Cortina, the Scourge. 361 The Squaw Spy. 3$2 Scout of '76. 363 Spanish Jack. 364 Masked Spy. 365 Kirk, the Renegade. 368 Bingle, the Outlaw. 367 The Green Ranger. 368 Montbars, Scourge. Metamora. 370 Thoropath, Trailer. 371 Foul-weather Jack. 372 The Black Rider. 373 The Helpless Hand. 374 The Lake Rangers. 375 Alone on the Plains. 376 Phantom Horseman. 377 Winous. 378 Silent Shot. 379 The Phantom Ship. 380 The Red Rider. 381 Grizzly-Hunters. 382 The Mad Ranger: 383 The Specter Skipper. 384 The Red Coyote. 385 The Hunchback. 386 The Black Willard. 387 The Mad Horseinan. 388 Privateer's Bride. 389 Jaguar Queen.

390 Shadow Jack.

292 Ocean Outlaw.

291 Eagle Plume.

393 Red Slayer. 394 The Phantom Foe. Blue Anchor. 396 Red-skin's Pledge. 397 Quadroon Spy. 298 Black Rover. 399 Red Belt. 400 The Two Trails. 401 The Ice-Flend. The Red Prince. 1003 403 The First Trail. 404 Sheet-Anchor Tom. 405 Old Avoirdupois. 406 White Gladiator. 407 Blue Clipper. 409 Red Dan. 409 The Fire-Eater. Blackbawk. 411 The Lost Ship. 412 Black Arrow. 413 White Serpent. 414 The Lost Captain. 415 The Twin Trailers. 416 Death's Head Ranger 417 Captain of Captains. 418 Warrior Princess. 419 The Blue Band. 420 The Squaw Chief. 421 The Flying Scout. 427 Sonora Ben. 423 The Sea King 424 Mountain Gid. 425 Death-Trailer. 426 The Crusted Surpent. 427 Arkaness Kit. 428 The Coresir Prince. Ethan Allen's Rifles. 430 Little Thunderbolt. 443 The Falenn Rover. 432 Honest Hand. 433 The Stone Chief. 434 The Gold Demon. Eutawan, Slaver. 436 The Masked Guide. 137 The Conspirators. 436 Swiftwing, Squaw. 439 Caribon Zip. 440 The Privateer. 441 The Black Spy. 442 The Doomed Hunter. 443 Barden, the Ranger. 444 Th Gray Scalp. 445 The Peddler Spy. 446 The White Canos.

502 The Rangers of the 448 The Two Hunters. 449 The Traitor Spy 450 The Gray Hunter. Little Moccasin. The White Hermit. 453 The Island Bride. 454 The Forest Princess. 455 The Trail Hunters. 456 Backwoods Banditti. 457 Ruby Roland. 458 Laughing Eyes. 459 Mohegan Maiden. 460 The Quaker Scout. 461 Sumter's Scouts. 482 The five Champions. 462 The Two Guards. 464 Quindaro. 465 Rob Ruckip. 466 The Rival Rovers. 487 Ned Starling. 468 Single Hand, 469 Tippy, the Texas. 470 Young Mustanger. 471 The Hunted Life. 472 The Buffalo Trapper. 473 Old Zip. 474 Foghurn Phil. 475 Mosstoot, the Brave. 476 Snow-Bird. 477 Dragoon's Bride. 478 Old Honesty. 479 Hald Eagle. 480 Black Princess. 481 The White Brave. 482 The Rifleman of the Miamil: 483 The Moose Hunter. 484 The Brigantine. 485 Put. Pomfret's Ward. 486 Simple Phil, 487 Jo Daviess's Client. 488 Ruth Harland. 489 The Gulch Miners. 490 Captain Molly. 491 Wingenund. 499 The Partisan Spy. 493 The Peon Prince. 494 The Sea Captain.

Muhawk. 503 The Double Hero. 504 Alice Wilde. 505 Ruth Margeria. 506 Privateer's Cruise. 507 The Indian Queen. 508 The Wrecker's Prize. 509 The Slave Sculptor. 510 Backwoods Bride. 511 Chip, the Cave Child $12 Bill Biddon, Trapper 513 Outward Bound. 514 East and Wost. $15 The Indian Princess 516 The Forest Spy. 517 Graylock, the Guide. 518 Off and On 519 Seth Jones. 570 Emerald Necklaco. 821 Maincons, 527 Hurt Bunker. 523 Pale-Face Squaw. 594 Winifred Winthrop. 525 Wresker's Daughter. 536 Hearia Forever. 527 The Frontier Angel. 328 Florida. 529 The Maid of Esopue 530 Ahmo's Plot. 537 The Water Walf. 832 The Hunter's Cablu-533 Hates and Leves. 534 Ocnomeo, the Huron 535 White-Faced Pacer. $36 Weizel, the Scout. 537 The Quakeress Spy. 338 Valled Benefactress 539 Uncle Eschiel. 540 Westward Bound 541 Wild Raven 542 Agnes Falkland. 543 Nathan Todd. 544 Myrtle, the Child of the Garirie. 545 L ghtning Jo. 546 The Blacksmith of Antwerp. 547 Madge Wylds. 548 The Craple Steters. 549 Star Eyes. $50 Myrs, the Child of Adoption. 551 Hawkeys Harry.

The following will be issued in the order and on the dates indicated:

552 Dead Shot. By Albert W. Alken. Ready September 25th. 558 The Boy Miners. By Edward S. Ellis. Ready October 9th. 554 Blue Dick. By Captain Mayne Reid. Ready October 23d. 555 Nat Wolfe. By Mrs. M. V. Victor. Ready November 6th.

447 Eph Peters.

556 The White Tracker. By the author of "The Boy Miners." Ready November 20th.
557 The Outlaw's Wife. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephene. Ready December 4th.
558 The Tall Trapper. By Albert W. Aiken. Ready December 18th.

559 The Island Pirate. By Captain Mayne Reid. Ready January let. 560 The Boy Ranger. By Oll Coomes. Ready January 15th.

561 Bess, the Trapper. By Lieutenant J. H. Randelph. Ready January 29th.
562 The French Spy. By W. J. Hamilton. Ready February 19th.

568 Long Shot. By Captain Comstock. Ready February 26th.

564 The Gunmaker of the Border. By James L. Bowen. Reedy March 11th. 565 Red Hand, By A G. Piper. Ready March 25th.

566 Ren, the Trupper. By Major Lewis W. Carson. Ready April 8th. 567 The Specter Chief. By Seelin Robins. Ready April 22d.

Published semi-monthly. For sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, single numbers, ten cents; six months (13 Nos.) $1.25; one year (26 Nos.) $2.50.

495 Grayboard.

494 The Border Rivals.

498 Sagamore of Saco.

499 The King's Man.

501 The Wrong Man.

500 Aftent and Ashors.

497 The Unknown.